Artificial Mineral Waters

TO THE PUBLIC.

TO THE PUBLIC.

OF all the choicest blessings bestowed on man, that of health has ever been most duly apple eciated. Without this, no other can be truly enjoyed, and with it most affiction may find an alleviation. Winataver, there ore, is conductive to promote and increase this blessing, hash strong claims on public parrouage and support. As tending to the object, Artificial Mineral Waters [when properly prepared] have been found effectual, as we lim their physics' as meral tendency; affording both an agreeable and salutary beverage, which, whilst they increase or promote health, offer a pleasing substitute for the pernicious are of ardent spirits, the inclination to which (from the exhibitating effects of these Waters) is considerably leasened, is entirely removed; being found to possess all the agreeable without their enerto possess all the agreeable without their ener to possess all the agreeable without their enervating or intoxicating qualities.

The pursuit of this valued blessing has led many for ages part to resort to springs family for their salubrious or restorative powers even when placed at the greatest distances. Happily the important discoveries of Chemistry, hath so far obviated this difficulty, and enabled art to excite nature by an exact imitation of her process adduced from analysis—thus, their benefic al properties are encreased, or those particles found injurious, lessened, or excluded at option.

It has been generally admitted that nature in the various diseases with which manking are in the various diseases with which manking are milited, has been equally bountiful in furnishing a remedy, than which some asher found more efficacious than the use of those waters; having proved successful in many cases, where all other applications had $\frac{1}{2}\times \frac{1}{2}\times \frac{1} pleasant syrups, &c] a truly nectarine bever-
