

oppression; and, although it has been two years since I first brought forward this subject, there has not been a single publication from the clergy contradicting it. I would wish it to be recollected, that the pay of the labourer is not such that he can exist on and pay tithes. It is much better in this country, and not that alone, but the peasantry here are much better off, they have better wages, and are entitled to parish relief. Besides, the clergy in Ireland employ persons to collect their tithes for them, while in this country they do it themselves; which brought the poor in a much worse condition; for instead of having to act with a divine, a gentleman, and a man of feeling, from his profession they had to submit themselves to the grasping hand of a paltry attorney, or of a parish clerk. These are circumstances, which, I contend, put the peasantry of Ireland on very different terms from those of this country.—(Hear.)—The Irish Legislature passed laws on this question, until they came to a code, but what effect had they? only to bring round the system of farmers or proctors. My wish, my hope, and all I desire is, that I could assimilate the laws of the two countries.—(Hear.)—In this country the tithes on flax was only five shillings, and in Ireland eight shillings per acre, although it was the staple manufacture of this country. I will leave to the candour of my honorable gentleman, if this is as it should be? I have heard of acts performed by those agents of the clergy, which make me shudder. But I will not take up the time of the House in arguing, or commenting on them.—(Hear, hear, hear.)—There is a fact, which ought to be well considered, that this country cannot supply grain for her own consumption.—(Hear, hear.)—I mean England. And how would she have been, if Ireland had not supplied her in 1846, when the Baltic was closed? I will come closer to the present period. Ireland had not supplied last year, 800,000 quarters of grain? The inference, Sir, that I shall draw from it is, that a much greater might be supplied from this country, if they were more encouraged. It is not my intention to interfere with the tithes of this country. It was last year objected, that I did not come forward with any specific plan; neither is it my intention now; as it is my wish that a committee should be appointed to inquire into every circumstance. I confess, it is my desire, my plan, that the Catholics should get rid of the payment of tithes to the Protestant Clergy. I wish, at the same time, they should have every equivalent. There are many difficulties which prevent tithes being so acceptable to the people of Ireland as to this country; one is, that they are not accustomed to parochial duties. The first necessary step, in my opinion, to be taken, is, to ascertain the amount of benefices, so as that the treasury may have full knowledge of them, and let the nation provide for them out of contingent expenses. The entire number of the Clergy amounted to thirteen thousand, and, on the best calculation which could be made, their revenues were £500,000 a year. I would recommend, instead of its being paid in the manner that it is, it ought to be taken in the general account of the nation, which will secure the Clergy's salary from the casualty of the depreciation of money. I feel a conviction in my mind, that this measure would afford effectual relief, and would conciliate the people of Ireland to the measures of this country. It might be said that this would be innovating the rights of the Clergy; but I have taken them into my full consideration, and they cannot be injured; and the great Blackstone's opinion bears me out in the assertion, for receiving an equivalent, they could not complain. I have too much respect for their characters to suppose they would; their minds are too much enlightened to consider it in that light; they, from education, and from their habits, would not object to this mode of payment.—(A long cry.)—I can assure the House, any thing I have said was not intended to create a laugh. I speak as I feel; for I believe there is not a more respectable class of Divines in the world, than the Protestant Clergy of Ireland. I would wish to alleviate their case; for how hurtful to their feelings must it be, to apply to the paper for his tithes, when, perhaps, the clergyman himself is in want! But how much more severe the case, when the paper had not the humane clergyman, but an inhospitable proctor to deal with, and go under every hardship! Hon. Gentlemen, who have never been in Ireland, could not have an idea how much the most useful parts of its peasantry, have been, and are depressed. The Right Hon. Gentleman, member for Down (Mr. Grattan) in a former Session, made a similar motion, and proposed to give a fund by county assessments. I do not intend to follow that precedent; but that it should be done by general taxation. I will not press for any particular mode, but any would be better than the present system. It may be asserted, that persons in the same situation as myself would feel it severe to bear a greater burden than we at present exist under. I, for one, say—No: relieve the oppressive state of my countrymen, and the last guinea I possess will I most willingly give up, to accomplish this great object. The people of Ireland expected, at the time of the Union, that this great grievance would be done away; they thought the country had given a pledge to that effect, and nothing could convince them to the contrary, but the parliament doing something to alleviate their distressed situation.—(Hear, hear.)—Can it be doubted that it was believed by the people of Ireland, at the time of the Union, that they were to be placed on a footing with Englishmen, and that the law was to be equally distributed? It would be dangerous to hold out it was not the case.—(Hear, hear.) I contend that it was by the means of this consideration being held out, that the union was ever effected. I request, may more, I would beg and implore of the House, by their vote this night to show, that the people of Ireland were not mistaken, that they had a strong will to hang by.—(Hear, hear.)—I caution the house not to hold out to so great a class of the people, and to so much of the strength of the British empire, that they cannot expect relief. I call upon this house, in the name of its own safety, to consider well before they decide. I wish them to remember that this is the only part of the empire which the tyrant of the Continent thinks vulnerable; give them the little they ask, and you will disappoint him. He will find them invulnerable, and as strong a barrier as any in the empire. I do, therefore, move, "That a Select Committee should be appointed, to take into their consideration the state of the tithes in Ireland, and other matters relative thereto."—(Hear, hear.)

From the Belfast News Letter.
Sir, In the multitude of indifferent poetry, which a newspaper must receive, the following beautiful lines, from Webb's Literary Amusements, will please your readers.

Assume, my verse, thy wonted art, While all in expectation stand—Canst thou not paint the willing heart That coyly gives the trembling hand?
Canst thou not summon from the sky Soft Venus and her milk-white doves?
Mark—in an easy yoke they fly, An emblem of unceasing loves.
Now, MIRA, art thou pale with fear; Look not, thou sweetness, thus forlorn; She smiles—and now such tints appear As steal upon the silver morn.
Quick, HYMEN, to the temple lead; Crown, thy victory, pursue;
In blushes rise the conscious maid; Trust me, she'll set in blushes too.
Well may the lover fondly gaze On thy bright cheek and bloom of youth, Impious of the calmer praise Of sweetness, innocence, and truth.
Yet these shall to thy latest hour, These only shall, securely bliss:
When the pale lip has lost its power, These shall give nectar to the kiss.

COMMUNICATION.

OBITUARY.—On Friday evening last at the seat of Samuel Chase, Jr Esq. departed this life, in the 21st year of his age, CHARLES YATES, son of Major Thomas Yates, of Baltimore. Mr. Yates has added one other unit to the sad list of young Americans, who have fallen victims to the climate of the West Indies, whence he had return but a few days since.

Never did the pen of friendship dwell upon a more melancholly event than the death of Mr. Yates! I have no talents at panegyric; they are not required. The virtues, the amiable inestimable qualities of this excellent young man, will live long in the memories of his acquaintances, and will speak his eulogy! His feeling heart sympathized in the misfortunes, and delighted in the happiness of his friend. His liberal hand was open to the relief of the distressed, and his noble soul bounded with eagerness to serve a friend. His fine countenance beamed with honest pleasure at the success of worth and virtue, & frowned with indignation at the schemes of meanness. I knew him, and I loved him. I knew him noble, generous and brave. I knew him cheerful and gay and I loved his manly spirit. It was but yesterday I knew him such! God of Heaven! look on the reverse! In the bloom of youth, of health and manly beauty, on the threshold of this world's vocations, on which he had stepped with an enterprising zeal and ambition, honorable to himself and gratifying to his friends, we see him, in an instant, laid from this life, we hear his name enrolled among the dead, and the clod of the valley rests upon his bosom. Such are the awful examples which divine wisdom places before our view. Rarely, if ever, has it visited us with one more difficult for human imperfections, to look on with submission; and with fortitude. But however inscrutable the Almighty's dispensations may seem, let us meet them with resignation. Yet it is not denied to a friend to weep over the remains of the man he loved, to cherish the sweet remembrance of his virtues, & to sympathize in the feelings of the unhappy Parent who has to mourn the loss of so good, so worthy and so dear a son. Alas, he is gone! No more shall the anxious eye of paternal affection gaze with exultation upon the rising excellencies of this darling son! no more will the tender heart of sisterly love bend to meet this amiable brother! no more will the honest hand of friendship grasp him to its bosom. No, he is gone!

He has gone to join the kindred spirit of Secreti, in the regions of the happy, where the "just are made perfect." With in one short twelve-month the hand of death has snatched them both, in the vigor of their manhood, from their friends and their country, and consigned them to the silent mansion of the tomb. We will remember them! we will lament them, we will emulate their virtues.

HAWKINS'S Mineral Water Warehouse, No 7, SOUTH GAY-STREET.

THE Subscriber respectfully informs the Public, that having completed his apparatus upon a very extensive scale for making Artificial Mineral Waters, he is now prepared to supply them with SELTZER, BALLSTON, and SODA WATERS, in the highest possible perfection.
It is with confidence he now solicits the support and patronage of the public, assuring them that every attention shall be made to give satisfaction, and to render the establishment worthy of the name.
These waters, it is well known, have been strongly recommended for various complaints and with the greatest advantage by the most eminent of the faculty, both in Europe and America. The fluid, formed by Distillation, or any of its distilling symptoms, is sure to find relief in the salutary beverage; and the Acidulated, whose oppressed stomach is one of the most of Malacia, &c. over night, is effectually cured by a glass of Soda in the morning. As the most laborious table, neither and Medicine of an emulsion, and this is one of the most useful with the Nautics is not less propitious to pleasure than to health.
To many persons being troubled under disease the above information will be peculiarly acceptable, though it cannot be expected, that in every case the proposed remedies should answer.
SELTZER WATER, from its pleasant taste & medicinal uses, has been long in very general use. It has been very much recommended by physicians for its antispas-modic powers, especially for its utility in many of the febrile and other diseases of large towns. It is a powerful aperient. In bilious complaints it is particularly useful, and it is the best remedy for that kind, and assuring the tone of the stomach and bowels, by which the mind and circulation are disordered. In very cold climates it is useful for invigorating the general system, exhibiting the spirits, and removing weakness. In the ill effects which a nervous & bilious, which take place, as the result of a consequent of head being, it is peculiarly adapted. It is most refreshing and salutary after excess in eating and drinking, by allaying the feverish heat and the general sinking therefrom.
By gently stimulating the nerves of the stomach it increases the power of its functions, and promotes the secretions in general, and is a most useful remedy.
When taken, it is a very useful remedy in dyspepsia, causing the milk to be easy on the stomach. In most of the stages of the catarrh, or common cold, either in the head or lungs, it may be taken with great advantage. With the exception of a most salutary and agreeable beverage.
It is one of the safest as well as most cooling drinks for persons exhausted by much speaking, heated by dancing, or when quitting the theatre, or crowded assemblies. It may be taken in the quantity of a common beer glass at a time.
As the subscriber was the first that introduced the Mineral Waters either in Europe or America, he is well known to be the author of the "Government of the U. States" and having acquired a considerable portion of his life to the invention and improvement of the waters, he is well qualified to inform the public, and to answer all the queries that may be put to him. He is willing, however, to leave it to a discriminating public to determine, not only to their respective rights, but the merits of their water, a being well assured that he will have abundant reasons to be satisfied with their decision.
A book is open at the warehouse for subscribers. Families can be accommodated by the single bottle, or by the dozen, in half pint, pint, or quart bottles.
Orders for exportation or the country, faithfully and punctually executed.
JOSEPH HAWKINS.

RAN AWAY from the 1st instant, a Negro Man, named DAVE, aged about 25 years, 6 feet high, complexion dark mulatto; a remarkable stout, well made fellow—and a variety of clothing not recollected, his hat was covered throughout this city—was raised by Mr. Jas.
Sloan, at whose country place his father now resides, and in which neighborhood, most probably he is lurking.
Any person who will bring to the subscriber, the said Negro Dave, if taken within five miles of the city, shall receive Ten Dol-40 or 100 Dollars Reward.

RAN AWAY from the Farm of the Subscriber, lying on the head of South River, Anne Arundel county, Maryland—the one on the 2d, the other on the 5th inst. Two Young Negro Men, brothers,
DAVID & BEN;
David the elder at brother, a mulatto, aged 25, five feet 6 or 8 inches high, well made, a pleasant countenance, speaks quick and walks briskly, has a scar under his right eye occasioned a few years past from a blow received from the overseer.
Ben aged 23, about 5 feet 8 or 10 inches high, a dark mulatto, a stout fellow, has a bold swaggering walk, his countenance more turbid than that of his brother, has occasionally an impediment in his speech, and the mark of a cherry on one of his cheeks. The clothing cannot be accurately described, as they were kept in Annapolis, they no doubt have changed them. Each has a wife living in Annapolis, as also a father, a blacksmith, named William Prout; likewise, other relations living in Baltimore, where it is highly probable they have gone. Any person apprehending either, shall receive a reward of 20 dollars if taken within the state, or 40 dollars for each, if taken without the state 50 dollars for each, or 100 dollars for both. The said Negroes to be brought home, or lodged in the Annapolis or Baltimore Jail—provided immediate information be given to the subscriber, so that he gets them again.

6 1-4 CENTS REWARD.
RAN AWAY from the Gaol of Baltimore County, on the night of the 14th instant—a Man known by the name of JOHN COX, who at this time holds his office of Constable.
The circumstances of his escape are as follows, viz.—He was brought to gaol on a verbal precept for debt, and that he might have the better opportunity of seeing some person whom he could send to a friend; if any he has, for the purpose of procuring the amount for which he was confined—the bounds of the gaol were given him. He had a few hours before he departed decanted fully on his own honour and honesty; but immediately on the approach of night, neither him, nor his gratitudo could be seen. It is probable the preceptant with which he fled caused him to neglect taking with him his honour and honesty, as I strongly suspect on his apprehension he will be found to possess none.
The above reward will be paid to any person who may deliver him to JOHN H. BENTLEY, Gaoler.
