

the potato garden. It was possible, that those who approved of thus taking one half from the clergy, might wish to take the whole; but to him it appeared much better to restore the part taken away, than, by secret measures, to form a substitute for the remainder. He would stand by what was left them. He, as much as any man, deplored the system of proctorage; but he could see no legislative measure to reduce it. In itself he was happy to observe it carried the seeds of decay. In Ireland, it appeared from the report before them there were 1,180 benefices, on which there were only 740 glebe-houses, and 500 of the clergy were non-resident. The late act was, no doubt, very salutary; but till the glebe-houses were completed (which active exertions were employed in carrying into effect), complete residence could not be expected. As this succeeded, the proctorage would certainly decay. He was ready to go hand in hand in any rational amendment that could be proposed. But would rather wait for the gradual effect of the system, than go into a committee to encourage rash and unfounded hopes, which must end in disappointment and discontent.

Mr. Herbert agreed perfectly with the hon. mover of the question. If the statement of the right hon. gentleman (Mr. W. Pole) was correct, it would act as an eternal barrier to the commutation of tithes. For he had said the clergy had now only one twelfth, instead of one tenth, which they ought to have; and that any change must revert to their original claim. One tenth of the produce was one sixth of the whole value of the land; and he would say, were this to be allowed for the performance of clerical duties, it were much better, instead of the exactions, to do away the law itself. He had one other great objection to the system of tithes - the fell on they industrious, and spared the idle. He wished a committee to be appointed; as, however it might now be urged to the contrary, he was convinced, a better mode of tithing, than that now existing, might be devised. He concluded by warmly panegyricising the motion, as calculated to produce the utmost benefit to Ireland.

Mr. Fitzgerald had been instructed most earnestly by his constituents to impress the necessity of this matter upon the House. Had the pressure of tithes not been in general very severely felt, he could not have had such instructions from a county, which from its nature, was as little liable to them as any in the country. He gave his most cordial support to the hon. mover, who had stated many aggravated facts, which were sufficient to induce even the friends of the tything system to call for inquiry. He therefore hoped the House would not withhold it. In their arguments the hon. gentlemen opposite had confined themselves to the plan of his hon. friend, but they ought to have answered the numerous observations thrown out by him, which were in themselves sufficient to demand inquiry. There were many plans of redress, but the fact was, there did exist a great evil, and if a committee was appointed, and should even report that no remedy could be discovered, that would satisfy and induce the Irish people to submit to their sufferings. But ministers asking them to put off till next session, and to trust to their inquiry, was to ask them to trust to what had already deceived them year after year. This had been a stale practice in the Irish parliament for 23 years - It was ever, "do not agitate the public mind while you have no digested plan," but this was posing the question for ever. As for exciting a flame of expectation, he was desirous of seeing it excited. It would be a new flame, and totally different from the flame of despair, which would be excited, should the house of commons reject inquiry altogether. Inquiry they called for, because tithes were not levied in Ireland as in England; because the same class of persons did not pay them; because they fell upon the poor; because the poor had not the same legal remedies; and from the terror of applying for redress to the Spiritual Courts, were driven to enter into civil contracts, on which the proctor levied costs, and distressed the people. In Ireland the church establishment was supported by the same class of people who in this country were the objects of parochial relief, and were placed in the poor houses. In England tithes were paid by the rich, who had capital, machinery, and great extent of land. In Ireland they were paid by the poor, without capital, and whose only machinery was to cultivate a small spot of ground. A member of one of the most arduous counties in England, (Mr. Coke of Norfolk) had complained of the tithes being to the amount of 5s. an acre, but what would they think, when they were told that wheat in Ireland paid two guineas, and potatoes 36s. an acre? The hon. gentleman then answered the arguments of the last speaker but one, as to the agitation in 1736. This, he contended, was an argument for, instead of against inquiry; as it made all the capital farmers withdraw from arable to the pasture land. In his opinion this was no remedy. It would be to double the income of the clergy, without relieving those now burdened. The idea was preposterous, and even had not the matter been settled by the union, the hon. gentleman would find it extremely difficult to prevail on parliament to double the revenues of the church. They were already abundantly paid; it was indecent to call upon the poor to pay the Protestant clergyman, who was not even expected to perform a single clerical duty, a baptism, a burial or them. To prove this, the hon. gentleman read an extract from a pamphlet, published in 1787, which he imputed to a learned and right hon. Doctor on the other side (Dr. Duigenan, who called on him to name the work.) He then went into a statement of the original revenues of the clergy, which he calculated were no more than half of the tithe, or tenth, the remainder being expended in the erection and repairs of their churches, &c. which were very expensive buildings. He perfectly concurred in the opinion, that the clergy should be liberally provided for; but could not acquiesce in the proposal that their emoluments should arise from the misery of the people. He wished that the house would act upon rational principles, and consider that such a mode of draining the country was completely inconsistent with justice, especially if the present condition of Ireland was at all an object of attention.

Mr. William Fitzgerald wished that an inquiry should be instituted, of a candid and legitimate nature, but different from the hon. gentleman, who had proposed the motion, as to the grounds upon which it should be supported. (To be Concluded.)

It will be observed, by distant readers, that it is not Mr. TAYLOR of Pratt street, who has applied for the benefit of the insolvent laws. (See 1st page.)

HAWKINS'S Mineral Water Warehouse;
No. 7, SOUTH GAY-STREET.
THE Subscriber respectfully informs the Public, that having completed his apparatus upon a very extensive scale for making Artificial Mineral Waters, he is now prepared to supply them with SELTZER, BALLSTON, and SODA WATERS, in the highest possible perfection.
It is with confidence he now solicits the support and patronage of the public, assuring them that every exertion shall be made to give satisfaction, and to render the establishment worthy of their encouragement.
These waters, it is well known, have been strongly recommended in various complaints and with the greatest advantage by the most eminent of the faculty, both in Europe and America. The invalid, tormented by Dyspepsia, or any of its distressing symptoms, is sure to find relief in this salutary beverage; and the Don Quixot, whose oppressed stomach is ailed by libations of Madeira, &c. over night, is effectually cured by a glass of Soda in the morning. At the most luxurious tables, Seltzer and Madeira are often mingled, and this union of Bacchus with the Naiads is not less propitious to pleasure than to health.
To many persons languishing under disease the following information will be peculiarly acceptable, though it cannot be expected, that in every case the proposed remedies should answer:
SELTZER WATER, from its pleasant taste and medical virtues, has been long in very general use. It has been very much recommended by physicians for its antiseptic powers, consequently for its utility in many of the febrile and other diseases of large towns. It is a powerful antiscorbutic. In bilious complaints it is particularly useful, by correcting the acrimony of that fluid, and assisting the tone of the stomach and bowels, by which pain and irritation are obviated or removed. In nervous affections it is useful by invigorating the general system, exalting the spirits, and removing weakness. To the ill effects whether nervous or bilious, which take place, as the debilitating consequence of hard living, it is peculiarly adapted. It is most refreshing and salutary after excess in eating and drinking, by allaying the feverish heat and thirst generally arising therefrom.
By greatly stimulating the nerves of the stomach it increases digestion, prevents flatulencies, and promotes the secretions in general, particularly that of the kidneys.
With milk, it is a very useful remedy in consumptions, causing the milk to sit easy on the stomach. In most of the stages of the catarrh, or common cold, either in the head or lungs, it may be taken with great utility. With wine or syrup, it affords a most wholesome and agreeable beverage.
It is one of the salts as well as most cooling drinks for persons exhausted by much speaking, heated by dancing, or when quitting hot rooms, or crowded assemblies. It may be taken in the quantity of a common beer glass at a time.
As the subscriber was the first that introduced the Mineral Water either in Europe or America, (for which he has obtained a patent from the Government of the U. States) and having applied a considerable portion of his life to their invention and improvement, he trusts that those who have been benefited by his labors, will not supercede him in favour and encouragement with a general public, but that he will come in for at least an equal share of public support with those, who had it not been for his labours, would not have had it in their power to establish similar manufactories. He is willing, however, to leave it to a discerning public to determine, not according to their respective rights, but the merits of their water - being well assured that he will have abundant reason to be satisfied with their decision.
A bottle opened at the warehouse for subscribers. Families can be accommodated with the single bottle, or by the dozen, in half pint, pint, or quart bottles.
Orders for exportation or the country, faithfully and punctually executed.
