

37 In consequence, every package of books imported, shall be put under seal by the custom house officer, and sent to the nearest prefecture.

38 If the books are found to correspond with the permit, every copy, or the first volume thereof, shall be stamped at the provisory place of depot, and be returned to the proprietor.

39 Copy-right is secured to the author and to his widow during their lives, if the marriage article give her the right, and to their children for twenty years.

40 The authors, whenever denizens or foreigners, of every work printed or engraved, may transfer their right to a printer or bookseller, or any other person, who shall enjoy the same rights as the authors, as mentioned in the preceding articles.

Miscellaneous Regulations.

41 In the following cases there shall be confiscation and fines for the benefit of the state, without interference with the dispositions of the penal code:

1st. If the author or printer's name be not affixed to the work:

2d. If the author has not made, before the printing of the work, the entry and declaration prescribed by articles 11 and 12:

3d. If the work having been demanded for examination, the printing or publication of it have not been suspended:

4th. If the work having been examined, the author or printer suffer it to be published, notwithstanding the prohibition of the director general:

5th. If the work be published, notwithstanding the prohibition of the minister of general police, when the author, editor, or printer cannot exhibit the process verbal mentioned in article 24:

6th. If having been printed abroad, it is presented for entry without permission, or circulated without being stamped:

7th. If it be a counterfeit, that is to say, if it be a work printed without the consent, or to the prejudice of the author or editor, or their assigns.

42. In the last case the author or editor, or their assigns, shall likewise be entitled to damages, and the edition or copies counterfeited shall be confiscated for their benefit.

43 The penalties shall be declared, and the damages fixed by the correctional or criminal tribunal, as the case may be, conformably to the law.

44. The proceeds of the confiscations and fines, as well as the duties paid on the importation of books, shall be applied to defray the expenses of superintending the professions of printing and book-selling.

45 Infractions of this decree shall be proved by the inspectors of printing and book-selling, by the police officers, and, besides, with regard to books imported, by the custom house officers. Each of them shall draw up a process verbal of the infraction, and of the circumstances attending it, and send it to the prefect of his district, for transmission to the director general.

46 The books seized, shall be provisionally deposited in the office of the secretary of the municipality, or in that of the commissary general of the sub-prefecture, or in the prefecture nearest the place where the sale or infraction has been proved, for conveyance to those to whom they shall be finally adjudged.

47. Our attorneys-general shall be bound to prosecute in all the cases mentioned in article 41, upon a copy of the process verbals being transmitted to them.

48. Every printer shall be bound to deposit, in the prefecture of the department in which he resides, and in Paris in the prefecture of the police, five copies of every work, to wit—one for the library for our council of state, and one for the director general of book-selling.

49. Particular regulations shall be enacted, as mentioned in article 3, for every thing relating to:

1 Printers and booksellers, their admittance and regulations;

2 Stall booksellers, who are not comprehended in the above regulations;

3 Type founders;

4 Engravers;

5 Bookbinders, and all those connected with the professions of book-selling and printing;

50 These regulations shall be entered by our council of state, upon the proposition of the director general of book-selling, and the report of our minister of the interior.

51. Our ministers are charged, each with what may concern his functions, with the execution of the present decree, which shall be inserted in the bulletin of the laws.

LONDON, June 15.

This morning a mail from Lisbon arrived at the post office, brought to Falmouth by the Princess Elizabeth packet, in 10 days from the Tagus. No battle had taken place when she sailed—but, at for some time past, one was shortly expected.

General Massena, who now commands the French force opposed to Lord Wellington, on taking the command, issued the following general orders:

ARMY OF PORTUGAL, SECOND CORPS.

Head Quarters, Valladolid, May 12, 1810.

ORDER OF THE DAY
The 1st, 6th, and 8th corps of the na, Duke of Rivoli and Prince of Esling has taken the chief command of them, conformably to an imperial decree of the 17th of April last: the army to be called the army of Portugal.

The prince has also the command of the northern provinces of Spain—viz. of Old Castile, of Leon, the Asturias, the provinces of St. Anders and Loira, of the provinces of Valladolid and Valencia, Toro, Zamora, Salamanca and Avila.

The general of division, Trignon, is appointed chief of the staff; and the general of division, Ebie, is to have the command of the artillery, pursuant to an imperial decree of the 21st of the same month.

The head quarters of the prince of Esling are provisionally established at Valladolid.

(Signed)
"TRIGNON,
"Chief of the Staff, &c."

ADDRESS TO THE ARMY.

Soldiers,

His majesty the emperor, in confiding to me the command of his army of Portugal, has been pleased to associate me in the glory which you are about to acquire in the new expedition to which you are destined. You are well aware, soldiers, that discipline and subordination are the first pledge of victory. What obstacles shall be able to resist your valor, when rigid observance of discipline shall have prepared your success? You shall always find in my conduct, and in that of my brother officers, the examples of perseverance amidst difficulties, fatigues and privations; and your dangers shall be common to us, as well as the glorious result which his majesty expects from the devotion of his heroes of the army of Portugal.

The Marshal Duke of Rivoli, Prince of Esling, commander in chief of the army of Portugal.

(Signed)
MASSENA.

A true copy.
Commander of the Engineers,
BRUYLL.

The letters received by this mail state, that general Massena has also issued a proclamation, addressed to the Portuguese nation, in which he styles himself "king of Portugal"—calling on them to "drive out the perfidious English, and submit to his authority"—threatening in case of non-compliance, that he will desolate the country with fire and sword.

Some of the letters also state, that he had also written a letter to lord Wellington, offering to give him permission to retire unmolested from Portugal, if he would depart immediately; but adding, that otherwise, he would drive the British army into the sea in less than three months, and would hang every British officer whom he found in the Portuguese army.

The French are said to have 73,000 men between Salamanca and Truxillo; 10,000 at Astorga; 16,000 at Ciudad Rodrigo; besides 18,000 in small detached parties—and the 4th division of the army of Portugal is said to have entered Spain.

Returned, the sloop Industry, Atwood, from New York bound to Bermuda, loaded with lumber, corn, &c. On the 15th of August, to the southward of the Gulf Stream, about half past 2 in the morning, was struck with lightning, which shivered the topmast to pieces, and so injured the mast, that it was with the greatest difficulty they could make sail. The watch on deck were so shocked, that it was some time before they could be recovered.
