THE WHIG.
"GIVE US BUT LIGHT."
BALTIMORE:
FRIDAY, SEPT. 28, 1810.
REPUBLICAN NOMINATION.

THEODORE BLAND and JAMES MARTIN
Have been nominated by the orthodox democrats of the Town and Point, to represent this city in the House of Delegates; and they are accordingly recommended to the republican citizens of Baltimore, for their united support.

ATTENTION, THE WHOLE!
Let voters for members of congress observe the STATE LAW; they cannot vote for two persons resident in the city, or for two persons resident in the county of Baltimore.
Let them, therefore, place on each ticket, the name of one citizen of the city, and the name of one other citizen of the county; or else, let them vote for one only.

THE LAW IS,
That "Baltimore city and Baltimore county shall be the fifth" district;— "which district shall be entitled to two representatives, one of which SHALL be a resident of Baltimore county, and the other a resident of Baltimore city."
STATE-SOVEREIGNTY.
Sept 22.

NOTICE
It is proposed to have a meeting of the citizens of the South Western part of the city and Federal Hill, at the Hanover Market House THIS EVENING, 7 o'clock, in order that the congressional candidates may have an opportunity of explaining to this portion of our citizens their views and opinions on the state of our public affairs.

From the Evening Post.
JOHN COMEGYS has ever considered the representative of a free people, clothed with their independent suffrage, as an honorable post in a republic. He is not ambitious of the present occasion to be a candidate, and most cheerfully withdraws his name from a nomination to represent the city of Baltimore in the General Assembly of this state at the ensuing election.

Communication.
Workers in wood shop! Don't forget Monday next; there's a clever old brother chip of ours, James Martin, of Lovely Lane, just blocked out in the rough and all hands are summoned to finish him off for a pillar in the next House of Delegates. Martin is a whig of full blood measure, as nice a piece of scantling as ever came under the plane.
Come muster, my lads, your mechanical tools;
Your axes and your axes, your hammers and rules;
For two pillars we'll raise, and our chorus shall be,
James Martin and Bland to all citizens
Fie!

I say, Boys! Don't forget Monday's Job! Martin is genuine heart of oak; I can't swear he is solid as iron, without boring him to the heart with a patent bit; for he has a end about fifty years summers and winters, without wearing. The best mechanics think he will work well. May he make my coffin, if I don't give him a lift, and bleed too, next Monday.
I VOTE.

A LESSON FOR MARYLAND.
The republicans of New Jersey complain bitterly of the dangers and lavish extension of particular acts of incorporation; that the state is overruled by them, to the reduction of the general liberty and the subversion of equal rights.

THE NEW JERSEY ELECTION
For members of the state legislature will be held on the 9th and 10th of October. It is worthy of remark, that no candidates are advocated or opposed by the republicans for either of the last session to tax bank-stocks, or the contrary. The farmers insist that it should be taxed like other property.

Communication.
Mr Irvine,
A few days since I observed the announcement of four candidates, out of whom two are to be elected by the people to represent this city in the next general assembly of Maryland; and, as one of the persons in nomination was a member of the Assembly at the last session, permit me to ask him [Mr. Bland] a question or two:
1. Did you or did you not vote against an amendment prayed for by many respectable mechanics of this city, to define what should in future constitute a mechanic's or manufacturer's eligibility to a certain board of Directors?
2. Did you or did you not vote for the amendment to the charter of the Union Bank of Maryland, thereby constituting it a stock jobbing institution, and giving it an exclusive privilege over every other bank in the state,—directly contrary to the constitution of Maryland?
Balt. Sept. 27. A VOTER.

COMMUNICATION.
THE CANDIDATES
For the National Medical College, &c. for Congress, are so humorously and allegorically dissected in the following communication, that we willingly publish it for the fun of the thing.

MR. TYFO,
Much has been said, and much yet remains to be said, for and against the respective candidates for the National Medical College. For my part, although a student, I beg leave to offer such remarks as are applicable to the diseases of the nation, and a proposed remedy to renovate the body politic.

All the gentlemen who are now candidates for graduation conceive themselves sufficiently well versed in the "healing art" to attempt a cure of the old lady, (our country)—and all seem perfectly agreed as to the disease under which the labours; but there appears to be some disunion, during every consultation, respecting the most beneficial remedy for her malady.

Dr. McKim advises stimulants applied externally, inasmuch as the disease is presumed to be the effect of contagion without, and consequently demand an outward application. He seems to be no friend to blood letting, as he has acknowledged himself to possess no merits in the surgical art. Give me but money to buy lancets, quoth he, and I will find you bleeders enough among the lower grades of the profession, who would be willing to undertake the business by the day, month, or job. I have set down Dr. McKim in my common place book as a physician whose nerves are too irritable to permit his looking at blood without producing a syncope—consequently of too little skill to be about our worthy old lady, at any other time than except when she is affected with—; at which time his skill might be serviceable.

Dr. Little has very candidly acknowledged his opinion to be in favour of emblog ligatures, because he conceived, or so that there was a motion in the system, out of all time, and feared it would ultimately produce febrile symptoms.—But that opinion he has exchanged in favour of a new doctrine, which, to his honour be it known, originated within his own pericranium. It shews that if he is not a man of great talent, (as has been whispered about) he certainly possesses a genius, which turns upon us, as great a firot as ever did that of the breast of Bartholomew's fair, who invented the wonderful powder to exterminate musquitoes—by squeezing them in the nose of the neck till they yawed, and then choking them with the aforementioned powder. This new doctrine is nothing less than to effect a cure by sympathy. For, reasons he, as the disease of which our lady now lies ill, has been produced by the effluvia of corruption that has been wafted from the sinks and unwholesome sanctuaries of St. James'; it follows, that as a cause produces an effect, so may that cause remove the effect it has produced, provided it has a becoming treatment.—Ergo; as the imported effluvia has produced a mental corruption here, he would recommend that those who were the primus mobile of that cause, shall be bro't hither, and suffer the pain of fishing the miasmatic effluvia, by having their noses buried over it before the eyes of our good old lady; and if the sympathy excited by their convulsions or wry faces, does not produce a salvific (meaning salutary) discharge, she will venture to be treated no doctor. Now, Sir, as I have not examined minutely into the good effects this new doctrine may produce, I have set down Dr. Little in my memorandum book as a young physician who appears to have regulated time by the "rule of eight." I should now pass on to Doctor Barney, and endeavour to examine his merits with the eye of a London critic, but without the same excitement.

Doctor Barney entered early into the profession, and has never lost or sullied a laurel, with which his brows have been bedecked by the representatives of the sage Esculapius. He has studied well his profession, and enriched that study by a successful practice. Nor has he ever been theoretical in his doctrines, any longer than time and opportunities would permit, to put them in practice, which have universally terminated with relat to himself.

Dr. B. conceives that the old lady was first affected in the extremities, by reason of a contagious effluvia in the air, as thick as locusts in the Egyptian atmosphere; and in consequence of a set of bungling doctors, who treated for a fatal affection, no effect has been produced but a windy discharge, and an increase of the disorder. He now thinks that she is troubled with hysteria; and fancies herself able, by the thunder of her voice, to exterminate the British navy, or shake the throne of Napoleon to its level—with the dogs. In his opinion, blood letting, to reduce the excitability in the brain, and prevent the formation of ideal, when real and solid objects should be portrayed, would be exceedingly serviceable at the present crisis of her disease. After which, a strong sulphureous unctio, applied externally, would remove those obnoxious animals and insects that crawl and flit about her, to the no small detriment of her health, purse and intellect. This seems to be the basis of Dr B's opinion. Honourable mention has been made of him in my folio recorder, as a physician who has faithfully served her ladyship in his youth, and worthy of doing so at a time when disease has rendered her incapable of attending to the domestic economy and regulation of her own household affairs.—

For as age begets experience, and experience is what she now requires, I will venture to recommend him as one who will never give a full because it is necessary. Now, Sir, as I have waded through the learned opinions of three very learned doctors, upon a subject too learned for any other than a doctor to undertake, permit me to conclude with those which I have engaged red, nursed, and shall now bring forth to the world. Premising that I am not a Job bunter, courting honours at the trumpet's mouth, (instead of the cannon's)—nor desirous, at this time, of thrusting myself upon the claims of the "sovereign people." For fear I should be compelled to withdraw, as many have done, through fear of odds against them—vulgarily called "in favour of principle, no men." But, Sir, perhaps at some future day, when I shall have made more and better friends, than those I now possess, I may venture to pronounce myself ready to receive their suffrages; but 'till that day arrives, they are contented with what I would do was I a national doctor.

I will presume myself to be seated in the Capitol, leaning upon my ivory-headed cane, on which is embossed in gold, the initials E. J. MD FAPS. ASS. and the old matron at my side, leaning her head alternately upon her right and left shoulders, bawling horribly, whilst Doctor Rundolph stands at her back, clapping her about the fifth vertebra to assist the expulsion. I feel her pulse, and pronounce her dangerously ill—Ay! ill of an embargo: a disease only known to be shuddered at. I pronounce it to have impeded the circulation of the blood; to have relaxed the nervous system; to have paralyzed the extremities partially, and to have produced a rebellion between the stomach and the brain, whereby the stomach is in danger of an atrophy for the want of a proper nourishment. I will bleed her in the tongue, and recommend quiet, or at least to refrain from boweling across the Atlantic at George and Boney, instead of sending her dogs of war to do it for her. I will then attempt to restore the circulation of the blood to its proper momentum;—and lastly, I will attempt to recover the nervous system; which, during its derangement last winter, and a year or two before, produced so many terrible night sweats—commonly denominated caucuses.

This treatment, if persisted in for a few short months, will restore her to that pristine health, which which she was wont to gambol during her infancy.—And I strongly recommend to either of the two doctors who shall be selected from our district, for the purpose of administering health and consolation to an aged and care depressed matron.

Having finished my course, I shall leave it to your judgment to determine, whether your pube beats in favour of a suppression or publication of the preceding "medical observations."
Esculapius Junior.

The poor devils in England seem to anticipate as much benefit to arise to them from the late magnanimous conduct of the Emperor in revoking his Decrees of Berlin and Milan, as we do ourselves. But after all they may find themselves egregiously mistaken, for it appears that the final revocation of these decrees depends upon the conduct which we shall exhibit towards Great Britain, provided her Orders in Council, and her piratical system of blockade are still adhered to after the period prescribed for the expiration of the French decrees.

The London Courier of the 7th August a violent ministerial paper, and therefore supposed to speak the sentiments of the government, in animadverting on the abrogation of the French decrees, has the following: "If he (Bonaparte) revoke his decrees, our orders consequent upon those decrees will be revoked also; but if he suppose that we shall abandon any part of the old maritime law, he will find himself completely mistaken." Now if this should be the determination of the British government, that is, if they are resolved to stick to the old maritime law of Kidd and Blackbeard; and we are also determined as heretofore to sit still and be kicked and cuffed, why then the revocation of the French decrees will not take effect, and all our present joy and gladness will end in sorrow and disappointment.

TORPEDOES.
On Friday morning the 21st inst. the following Gentlemen, appointed by the Secretary of the Navy to examine and report on the principles and utility of Mr. Fulton's Torpedoes, met at the City Hotel, in this city—
Rob't R Livingston, Morgan Lewis, Oliver Wolcott, C. D. Boldeu, Col. Williams, Mr. Garret, Dr. Kemp, Com. Rodgers, and Capt. Chauncey
We understand that the principal object of these gentlemen is to minutely examine and test by experiment, if necessary, the various modes which Mr. Fulton has to propose for placing his Torpedoes under the vessel while at anchor or under sail: for, from the experiments he has already made by blowing up two brigs, it appears to be admitted
