Hy the ship Factor, capt. Biddell, from Liston, which port he left on the 27th of August, we learn that ford Wellington's head quarters were at Celerique, and the French head quarters at chimelds, about to miles distant.

The Prench string were suffering for the want of provisions, end the British ermy with the fever and egue.

A general battle was shortly expecting Almeida by night; the garrison of which consisted of 3000 men, under gen. Scott.

Great Illuminations and other: rejoicings had taken price at Lisben, which lasted three nights, in consequence of the marriage at the Brezis of a Princess of Portugal to a Prince of Spain Flour at Lisbon, seventeen and su half delluts. We have received Lisbon papers to the 25th of August, which state, that 3860 infentry, and eight hundred cavalland, and several more troops were daily expected.

Extract of a letter from Lisbon, dated

August 23

A pocket sailed this morning for England, with dispatches from lord Wetlington. The news by telegraphs states. that the French had commenced the attack on Almelda, a d were bombarding it with great spirit, and that it was ne cessary for lard Wellington to march his army and attack them immediately. The armies were within a few miles of each other — The French about 70,000,18d the English about half that number, but receiving reinforcements daily. Most of the people here are trembling for the events of a battle, which is momently expected. The English have all things ready to embark, and the French are within 150 miles of this place. All the guns that can be found in Portugal, even the castle and for guns of Links and have guns that can be found in Portugal, even the castle and fort guns of Lisbon have been put on board English ships, together with the property of such Portuguese nobility as intend to leave the place should the French succeed."
