

of this constitution, and under his crown and kingdom what he saw were the crowns and kingdoms of his neighbours. He had no sooner adopted this resolution, than he went to France to consult with the French ministry and government the means of effecting it. The French ministers very naturally concurred in a measure, which, by occupying Sweden from all Russian interests and connections, rendered her a more equal opponent to that ambitious power, and thereby a more efficient member of the balance of the North.

On his return from Paris, the king, previously arranged every thing, called a meeting of the diet, as if on some most important business. Upon the meeting, which from the expectation excited from the extraordinary summons, was very full, the chancellor, in order to take up a necessary interval of time, entered into a long account of the state of the kingdom. The king himself entered as he concluded, and briefly told the diet, that in such a state of the kingdom it was necessary to alter, or rather to do away entirely the existing constitution; that the popular liberties only fomented and cherished parties, which rendered the sovereignty a burthen to him; that he was resolved, therefore, not to be less a king than his neighbours, and had brought with him the scheme of the new constitution, and a deed of renunciation of all the popular rights, which he required them to sign before he left the hall of assembly; he added, that in order to prevent any riots, he had ordered the hall of the diet to be surrounded by cannon, with lighted matches, and none of the members of the diet would be allowed to leave the hall, or to pass the guard, till they had signed and sworn their acceptance and renunciation.

What were men to do in this situation? It is unnecessary to add, that the king's wishes were accomplished, and the liberties of a brave people thus forced from them at the mouth of the cannon.

To the long disgrace of the people of Sweden, the king was permitted to reign two or three years after this atrocious felony on the rights of the people. He at length, however, met his deserts, and died under the blow of one of his subjects.

The late king of Sweden succeeded to the throne and new constitution procured by the fraud of his father, and therefore succeeded to the popular dislike, or at least indifference, which such conduct was calculated to perpetuate. To this cause of indifference the late king soon added one of personal offence—He adopted the French war, and having once adopted it, persevered in it to the manifest ruin of his kingdom, and in decided opposition to the public voice—Had he remained king another year, Sweden would have been extinguished as one of the kingdoms of the north.

Hence the indifference with which the Swedes beheld the deposition of this king, and hence the equal or greater indifference with which they have beheld, in the election of Bernadotte, the deposition of his whole family, and the introduction of another.

Such have been the causes of this tranquil revolution. As to the consequences, though they are certainly rather eventual than immediate, they are not of the less importance to a state which, as not being the creature of a day, should extend its prudence with its natural duration, and provide for itself more remotely than is required of an individual.

These consequences are of two kinds; those which affect our commerce, and those which affect our national safety. May not Sweden, in conjunction with Denmark, shut the Sound against the English trade? May she not, and will she not, prevent the supply of naval stores, of timber, &c.

The most serious consideration, however, is, that it throws into the hands of France, a nation of seamen, a people down to the ocean, in almost an equal degree with Englishmen themselves—Is it possible that with such resources France can long want a navy—Holland and Sweden, in this point of view, are of infinitely more consequence than all the Italian and Mediterranean conquests.

The greatest difficulty of Bonaparte has been to man his navy.—There have been such vast calls on the population of France to supply the army, that the fleets of France, whenever they have been able to escape out of port, have always been found insufficiently manned.

A population like that of Sweden, a Northern people, born on the shore of the sea, is therefore of infinite value to the naval views of Bonaparte—And what we have justly to dread from this kind of people, so employed, we may in some degree be enabled to estimate, by recalling to memory, what infinite trouble the Dutch gave us in the commencement of the war, and what has always been the characteristic reputation of a northern people. The name of Van Trump is as little forgotten in England as in Holland.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 31. FIRE.—Last evening, between 6 and 7 o'clock, a fire broke out in the stable of John Flint, coachmaker, Arch street, near Ninth st. consumed the same, with a row of wooden buildings, occupied for his coach-making business, and the shop of Mr. Davis, coach-painter, and gilder, adjoining, together with a number of coach and chaise bodies, and parts of carriages, that could not be removed. The curiosity of the citizens and hose companies prevented its spreading, though the combustible materials were at first begun, prevented their saving any of the wooden buildings or their contents.

A grand Speculation offers!
On TUESDAY next, the 6th November, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, will be sold on the premises, the unexpired term of a lease in and to that situated at the corner of Paca and Fayette-st. together with all those extensive buildings thereon erected.
The lot fronts 60 feet on Paca street, and is bounded by Fayette street 150 feet to an alley. There is on this property two extensive buildings: one of them originally intended as a riding school, is 150 feet in length, and 60 feet in width; the other, contiguous to the former, is 150 feet in length, and 20 in width. This valuable lot and buildings is situated in a most eligible situation, and might at a trifling expense be converted into one of the most extensive wagon yards and taverns in the state, or, it is equally well calculated for an extensive manufactory.
The terms (which will be made advantageous and pleasing) and other particulars, will be made known at the time of sale.

THIRTY DOLLARS
REWARD
WAS LOST on the 27th inst. a RED MOROCCO POCKET BOOK—containing to the best of my knowledge One Hundred and Thirty Dollars in Bank Notes, wrapped in a piece of brown paper, a Five and a Three Dollar Note lost in said Pocket Book, which amounts to 138 Dollars in Bank Notes, besides some Silver, the amount not known. This Pocket Book contains some papers which I do not recollect altogether—but I remember two advertisements wrote for a Piece of Ground for sale near Reister's-town; and a bill of cost against Thomas Stockdale to Thomas Jones, of 257 dollars 50 cents; and a receipt, taken this day out of the Sheriff's office, for 43 cents—besides, some more that I do not know the value of at present. I suppose it was lost in Market Space, between the hours of 10 and 12. Any person finding said Pocket Book and make it known to ORMAN JARVIS, living at the south end of Charles's street, or to the subscriber, shall receive the above reward, paid by me viz 3 near the 22nd street, on the Winchester route of the Baltimore and Reister's-town turnpike road.
