I built this year, three houses in Henrietia street, for 95,000, but actually required but 82,100. This difference was owing to their being somewhat larger than other bricks, to their superior strength, so few being broken, and because every brick is of full size; no washed bricks. I never knew so little waste from so large a quantity. A common barrow held all the waste from the three houses. I consider them equal, if not superior to hand made bricks.

JOHN FITZPATRICK. I have laid about a million of Mr. Smith's Steam Pressed Bricks, and prefer them to any that I ever worked. Last fall I built two houses for myself in McElderry street, of them, but a part of the East Ga ble, a four inch wall, I had to finish with hand made bricks. During a north east storm the water drove through these, but did not come through the Steam that these bricks will stand the frost as well as any ever made and will turn the water better. A. A.
