PROSPECTUS OF
JAMES W. CONYER'S
Classical School for Boys,
CAMBRIDGE, MD.

LOCATION.
THE situation of the School is retired. The room large, well ventilated, and will be comfortably furnished. It possesses the advantage of a yard, which gives ample room for exercise and distant from street exposure.

COURSE OF STUDY.
The choice and arrangement of the studies, the mode of recitation and text-books adopted, shall conform with the custom of the best seminaries; associating the two great elements of sound scholarship—order and completeness. The course of study embraces the various branches of education, necessary either for business, or for college course. Great labor will be bestowed upon Declaration, Composition Criticism and Penmanship.

DISCIPLINE.
The discipline of the School is designed to be, as much as practicable, mild but strict. As much care will be taken of the moral and religious conduct and habits of the scholars, as of their intellectual advancement. The intercourse between the professor and his pupils is designed to be frank and unreserved.—A brief lecture will be delivered at the opening of the school every morning upon subjects connected with their future welfare, &c. The design of this is to engage attention to study by inculcating a firm and intelligent conviction of duty. A short account of progress and deportment will be sent quarterly to each parent. Patrons and any who may feel interested, are invited to visit the school on any day during its session between the hours of 10 and 12 A. M. or 3 & 5 o'clock P. M.

SESSIONS.
The scholastic year will be divided into two sessions—the first beginning on the first Monday in January, and closing the last of July—the second commencing on the first Monday in September and ending about the 21st of December.

TERMS.
For the common English studies, per session $12.00 For the higher branches of English Literature, 16.00 No deduction will be made for absence except in case of protracted illness.

Jan 2 1847—3w

It is proper I should embrace this occasion, to do justice to the valuable school (the Academy) of a high order, which is supported by public appropriation. The policy that established this was undoubtedly good; yet it was but partially good, so long as it stopped short of providing, at least an additional professor for the education of many scholars who may be crowded into that institution. Believing that the wants of the community call for an institution, such as I have established, through the solicitation of many that are interested, it is now left for further patronage. An aspiring youth should seek every opportunity for mental culture, that is afforded to those with whom he may be called to cope, in the arena of civil and political strife. Now that opportunities are afforded they should be embraced. If the community, in which he lives, does not judiciously make this provision for him at home, he owes it to himself to seek it abroad. That he will so seek it, is as certain as that he possesses pecuniary means. And is this a conclusion that will satisfy the wealthy portion of this country? Will they think it enough, that the privilege falls to the lot of the few, by the mere accident of fortune?—Or, when rightly understood, should you not patronize an additional institution within the borders of your county, which would supply the present desideratum, for the freest development of native talent?—Great men, do occasionally rise by accident. Yes, the community that thinks it useless, to foster native talent, may chance find them, rare as good men were in the time of the soil.

"Rara quippe boni; numerus vix est totidem quot, Thebarum portae, vii divitiis ostia Nilii."
In times of civil commotion, when a State enters the lists, by her representatives; what shall sustain her honor, or defend her interest, but the intellectual might of her chosen men? Jealousies, dissensions, disputes and collisions, are ever liable to arise among the several members of the Union, in which the unequal contest may place power in the room of justice. Occasions often arise, when all the moral energies of the people are absorbed, in the one point in debate. It is then that a State should have illustrious sons in the councils of the nation. It is then parents feel a conscious pride in the efforts of their sons, who grapple with the giant minds, engaged to repel the claims, or thwart the purposes of his native State. It is then, in one short hour of triumph, that a dutiful son repays a thousand fold, the costliest nurture that neared his arm for the contest. And can parents rationally expect the highest devotion of their sons to any respectful profession, if they make not ample provision for their education? No people on earth are more strongly incited to the highest cultivation of the intellect. Do we not perceive that all our republics have every thing to promise themselves, from the encouragement they may extend to education; and every thing to fear from a relative neglect? With the emulation that you should be engaged; you cannot for a moment, lose sight of the advantages which a people derives from the diffusion of knowledge.

Parents should scout the idea, that a superficial knowledge of the sciences, are only requisite to pass muster. What earthly advantage can be gained by committing an unfeigned sciolist, under the sound of a professional name, to the patronage of the public? The most natural result will be, to leave him, ordinarily, an easy victim of mortification, inactivity and ruin. It is no purpose to quote examples of professional distinction, in men who have raised themselves without the advantage of a regular education. Such professional characters are always known to lament the limited extent of their opportunities; and however distinguished they may have become, they are conscious that a better education would have enhanced their own satisfaction and success. In short they are proverbial illustrations of the lines of the Roman Censor:

"Summos posse viros et magna exempla daturis, Vervecum in patria, crasseque sub ire nasci."

It has become fashionable for the young to enter the professions, while they ought to be entering a seminary; and it is not surprising that the common sense of the people, shocked at the results, regards all education as futile and perhaps pernicious.

I will at present conclude by unfolding a plain matter of fact statement, for those vitally interested. The importance of branches of study is not to be estimated so much by their practical availability in after life, as by the opportunities which they afford for thorough mental discipline.

The study of language is chiefly valuable for the beautiful and systematic details of philology, which exact from the student such care, and vigilance and discrimination. From this stand point, grammatical recitation wears an important aspect. To say nothing of its principles, grammar presents an order so precise, that it allows scarcely a deviation—a method so analytic, that the most inconsiderable word merits attention. Its proper study, therefore, must form a habit of precise and analytic investigation; and habitual attention to its rigid rules and strict deductions must beget logical acumen. The defects in the established method of classical instruction, have been long a subject of remark. Milton in his letter to Master Harlib, mentions them. Locke, in his "Thoughts on Education," alludes to them; and Roger Ascham, an earlier writer still, even puts forth the leading idea of the new system, now so popular in Germany.

The peculiarities of this system, which is rapidly superseding the old method, may be indicated under the following heads:

1. Lower definitions, particularly at early stages of study.
2. The omission of all that will not be immediately needed.
3. Teaching more by oral instruction.
4. Exclusive attention to roots of classes of words.
5. Regular arrangement of the system of word-ending, such as case-ending of nouns; tense-ending of verbs together with roots, characteristics, mood vowels, &c.

The beautiful regularity of the Greek verb was almost unknown (though often eulogized) until Thiers discovered the true method of forming its varied inflections. By this plan pupils learn in half the time, retain doubly as well, and understand clearly what was before a mystery to the sage pedagogue himself.

Now, in conclusion, permit me to say, that the amount of patronage solicited from any individual, will be gratefully acknowledged. And my greatest exertions to educate, to train, to induce thought, to habituate to study and self-reliance, and to arouse pure and lofty aspirations, shall know no abatement.

Chancery Sale.
A RARE SITUATION.
Y virtue of a decree from the High Court of Chancery, I will offer at public sale, in the village of New Market, on SATURDAY, the 30th day of January, inst., between the hours of 10 o'clock, A. M. and 4 o'clock, P. M., the land whereon the late Joseph Ennals resided; called, or known by the name of "Indian Land, No. 1," and "Indian Purchase," containing about 253 1-4 Acres.

This situation is regarded as one of the most eligible in the county, being finely situated on the Choptank River, and combining advantages that are rarely to be procured. Among these are a very good Mill privilege, an abundance of fish, oysters, and ducks, a most delightful neighborhood, together with proximity to New Market, one of the principal towns in the county, from which it is only 2 1/2 miles distant.—

The HOUSE is of brick, and very spacious, having two large rooms and a large passage below stairs, with a good cellar, and three rooms above; requiring but little improvement to make it a fine mansion. The internal resources for improving the land are good and abundant. A good orchard of APPLES and PEACHES, good drinking water, and a sufficiency of timber for the supply of the farm.

This situation is about 11 miles from Cambridge. The above property will be sold free from all incumbrance whatever.

The terms of sale are, one fourth cash on the day of sale, and the remainder of the purchase money in 6, 12 and 18 months, all secured by bond and security approved by the Trustee, with interest from the day of sale.—On payment in full of the purchase money, a conveyance will be made to the purchaser.

Endless resources of manure are presented on this Farm to make it a rich investment, by a moderate share of skill and attention. THE SUNDAY EXTRA.
A new weekly paper, devoted to Polite Literature, Foreign and Domestic News, Science and the arts, Critical Essays, Philology, Satire and Humor.

THOMAS R. WHITNEY Editor. One dollar per annum payable in advance.

The undersigned has the pleasure to announce that he will issue on Sunday, the 6th of December next, a new Weekly Paper, to be called the SUNDAY EXTRA. The principal aim of the editor will be to make the "Sunday Extra" a complete mirror of the times, in which will be faithfully reflected, in an interesting and condensed form, the News of the Week, Cream of New Works, Tales of Fiction, Fact and Romance, original and selected, Gems of Poetry & Prose, Fetters on Science and Art, Reviews, satire, Wit, the Stage, &c., &c.—in short to make it an acceptable Fireside Journal, complete in all its parts, and unexceptionable in point of merits. The "Extra" will maintain a high tone in all its departments; and while eschewing politics, as such, reserve to itself the right freely and candidly to discuss all questions of acknowledged public interest and importance. A number of correspondents of known and approved talent, resident in different parts of the Union, have been secured, who will contribute their best efforts to the "Extra"; the aid, also, of an eminent Foreign Correspondent will add a valuable feature to its columns. The several departments of Literature, Science, and the Arts will be placed under the charge of experienced writers, and the editor will spare no exertions to make the "Extra" a complete Paper, while he confidently expects, as he intends to merit, the substantial endorsement of the public to his exertions.

THOMAS R. WHITNEY. Publishing Office, No. 35 Ann Street.
