TAKE BACK THE GIFT. Take back, dear maid! the blushing flowers Thy gentle fingers placed in mine, Ere they recall the vanished hours When I was cheered by smiles of thine. Take back—take back thy only gift, From which my mornory go'er shall pars A lasting impress on my heart.

Take back, dear maid! the fatal prize That still reminds my beart of thee, And bids me love those scarching eyes, Mine own perhaps, no more may sec, Still, let no other's fingers press The gift, thine pressing made their own, And I in after years will bless The fore that loves me now alone.

Take back thy gift, and if, dear maid ! Thou wouldst one rapture still bestow-Then let that rapture be conveyed In bidding Hope's sweet waters flow. Whate'er may fate in after years, Though scattered by stern Misfortune's blast, My heart embalmel in hidden tears, Shall be thy monument at last.
