The Thorns of Life.

BY CYMON.

(As near you blossom'd grove I tarried)

With cheeks flushed o'er with rapturous joy,

And in his hand a prize he carried.

The sweet nest of the freckled linnet;

"Where has thou got those birds this morn?"

But see, my hands are sadly bleeding.

And didst thou then that wild tree rifle:

Thou'lt catch at many a worthless bubble:

Though Clouds of Sorrow Lower.

But midst the darkness and the gloom

(Mindless of thorns which there beguiled)

A prize which he would not forego,

And oh, with what delight he saw,

Four little callow chirpers in it.

I said; and he replied unheeding,

"I've found the nest in youder thorn,

Ah me my boy! poor reckless child!

To gain so poor, so mean a trifle?

While keener thorns thy breast will gall,

And turn thy joys to tears of trouble.

Though clouds of sorrow lower.

Let not reproach find vent;

And with firm, unwearing faith,

Hope's bright sunshine borrow;

And recollect though dark to day,

And give not way to vain regret,

It cannot close the hidden spring

Forget not that afflictions deep

Are oft from heaven sent;

If trials you should meet;

To heaven's starry scope;

Nor at your lot repine;

Let holy feelings of content

Repose within your breast:

Murmur not at heaven's decree,

And leave to God the rest.

Its silken fetters bind;

their part also."

them, but to make the service a cheerful one.

If thorns unnumber'd and untold

Spring up beneath your feet;

Look up, look up, above this earth

And pray that pure and steadfast faith

Then ne'er complain beneath your load,

But let sweet faith around your heart

"Down-Trodden Maryland."

May warm your soul with hope.

A lesson of content.

By God, to teach unto his flock,

From whence the sorrows flow;

Then in your journey through this life,

Learn thou to be content;

It may be fair to-morrow.

It is no balm for woe:

And oh! in riper years withal,

Maize and Tobacco.

The Indian Corn looked over the fence, And what do you think he spied? A field of Tobacco just ready to bloom, And stretching in lordly pride.

To the broad leaved neighbor at once he called, In accents loud and clear,-"I thought you belonged to a summer clime; Pray what are you doing here?"

So then, with a haughty air, replied That plant of power and pelf. "You are pleased to ask of my business, sir-What do you do, yourself?"

"I feed the muscles, and blood, bone, That make our farmers strong, And furnish bread for the little ones That round their table throng."

"Move in a somewhat loftier sphere,"
