All Hail America.

BY DR. A. L. MANKING,

men of Dorchester county.

Hail, hail, thou noble land of song,

And in their faces proudly laugh,

America's the home for me.

And trample down a holy cause

America must, will be free,

Rebellion's cause is failing fast,

Trembling as Satan did of old

America begins to see,

America is ever free,

And old Jeff. Davis stands aghast,

When hurled o'er battlements of gold;

And wisdom shouts the victory.

His uncle's too-avenging flood;

And from the ground it ever cries,

The traiter scoundrel, surely dies;

Must rid itself of such as thee.

But what displays a blood-stained hand,

And longs to steal the more they clutch.

So long as such remains in thee.

But hark! I hear the trumpet's blast,

From every mountain, plain and glen,

From out the graves you're passing by,

A voice comes forth—in thee we trust;

And now it turns its gaze on thee.

The cut-throat gang, with fiendish glee,

But from its broad, imposing dome,

Sull waves the banner of our home.

The dastard wretches who would dare,

To wish the treach'rous banner there,

Before the march of freedom's braves;

That glorious hope's enough for me.

And thrice hurl back each treach'rous thrust.

The Stars and Stripes will wave o'er thee.

A FORAGING PARTY IN VIRGIN-

KENTUCKY CONSERVATISM.

Each dastard's hand, each villain's blow.

Will moulder in forgotten graves,

America will, will be free,

Arise, ye Phenix from the dust.

America's born to be free.

East New Market, Dorchester Co.

Would even now dismember thee;

In which their fathers dared to trust.

And hurl the temple to the dust,

For all the earth will yet be free.

And from each little mound of dust,

And troops of freemen rushing fast,

Ten thousand patriot voices cry

There's not a leader of that clan

Or has already pilfered much,

America can ne'er be free

And Yancy's hands are stained with blood,

America from sea to sea.

But nail thy color to the staff,

America will still be free,

The Rebel host, would do thee wrong,

The dastard throng would madly break

The bonds of love, they ne'er can shake,

That, still stands firm, for truth and laws.
