ANOTHER YEAR.

The year has sped by with meteor flight, And warns us of the tomb; Another one had quenched its light, In everlasting gloom.

Another milestone on Life's road Is now forever past; Per chance-no one can know save God-We've tottered by our fast.

We are as fragile as the leaf Quick yellowing to decay; The longest life is but a brief And strangely checkered day.

Tis surely time to rest our our. To pause awhile for breath, Before we reach the silent shore, And yield our dust to Death.

But not with sorrow, tremblingly, Need we survey our chart; Wrestling with storms upon the sea, Should stouter make the heart.

And we who on the sea of Life With fiercest storms have striven, Should courage take in times of strife, And leave the belm to Heaven.

Yet, still 'tis well, as years roll round, Our good ice-bark to view, And see that cord and plank are sound, Rudder and compass true;

For many a bark, that long ago Launched forth with colors bright, Heavy with weeds, lies dark below ; The subshine and the light.

LIFE'S OBJECT.
