From the Saturday Evening Post. DREAMING.

BY LUCEBN ELLICTT.

I am dreaming, greatly dreaming, Of the days that flitted by, When the hours to me were seeming Like a meteor in the sky. Then the golden woof of pleasure, Sunlight dancing on each thread, Dancing to life's joyous measure, Fairly turned my childish head.

I am dreaming of the hours, When hope with golden light · Stole o'er my childish fancy, In visions pure and bright. Then came the guileless friendships Of those merry blithesome days, With memories of the hill-side haunts, Still loved though fare away.

Those golden hours have passed away, Those friends are changed or gone, Some have forgotten childhood's days, In the busy gay world's tone. We meet life's stern realities, Old nature seems less kind, And now the shadows cree befoet,
