The Soldier's Sweetheart.

I go down to the sea, Where the waves speak to me Of my darling, the soul of my soul; But her footprints no more Mark the desolate shore. Where she tempted the billows to toll.

There the sad billows break, Like my heart for her sake, On the lonely and desolate shore; For the waves of the sea Are now sighing with me, For a mortal, now mortal nor more.

With my heart filled with fears, And my hopes chilled with tears, By the grave of my darling I knelt, And I uttered a prayer On the listening air, Whose dew wept the sorrow I felt!

There the winds wove a shroud Of a dim passing cloud. Betwixt me and the bright stars above And the form in its fold, Like the shape under mould, Was the form of the angel I love.

Would that I were a flower, Born to sunshine and shower; I would grow on the grave of the dead, I would sweeten the air With the perfume of prayer. Till my soul its incense had fled. .

And I never would fade In the delicate shade Of the tree in whose shadow she lies There my petals should bloom, By her white, rural tomb, When the stars closed their beautiful eyes.

Now I see her in dreams On the banks of the streams. In that dear land of exquisite bliss, Where the sweep of her wings, And the song that she sings, Oft awake me to sadness in this.

Blessed be the hand that prepares a pleasure rybody remember some kind-hearted man who showed him a kindness in the dulcet days of childhood? The writer of this recollects himself, at this moment, a barefooted lad, standing at the cutter by trade, and spent the whole week at work in the woods. He had come into the garden to gather flowers to stick in his coat when he went to church. He saw the boy, and breaking off the most beautiful of his carnations-it was streaked with red and white-he gave it to him. Neither the giver nor the receiver spoke a word, and with at a vast distance from home, after so many years. the feeling of gratitude which agrated the breast of that boy expresses itself on paper.
