KIND WORDS.

If e'er thou meet'st a brother sad, And wearied of life's way, Speak unto him a kindly word, Twill not be much to say. But it may cheer his spirit wan, May heal some wounded part; For gentle tones an echo have In every human heart.

When'er thou seest the mourners grieve, Wild weeping o'er the dead, Then is the time, with soothing care,

Thy loving tears to shed. Griere with them o'er the friends they've lost, But lead them still on high, And whisper that their bud of hope Shall blossom in the sky. And if there be some reckless one

Fast bastening to the tomb, Then to his rescue stretch thy hand, And save from its gloom; Tell of another brighter home Away from sin's dark wiles, And guide him on with heartfelt words And cheering, loving smiles.

And should thou meet earth's guilty ones, Oh! then upbraid them not! Nor think though cold and hard they seem, madam.' That love is all forgot;

It may be that one gentle word The softening heart may ope; While bitter ones the soul would wound, And close the fount of hope.

'Tis thus a tone, a simple sound, In earnest spirit given, May wake a cord, of common love, May point the way to heaven; Then speak thou nought but loving words Act thus thy "better part;" To thee 'tis little, but may touch Some drooping, feeling heart.
