THE OLD YEAR'S GIFTS.

What have you brought to me Old Year? Many a hope and many a fear, Many a joy, and many a pain, Pleasure I ne'er shall know again: For the world grows sad as we grow older, But smiles no less on each new beholder.

What have you brought to me Old Year, Love so sweet, and its burning tear, Longings That mocked me, hopes that died, lofinite wants unsatisfied. And instead of thanks would not scorn be fitter

What have you brought to me, Old Year? Doubt and darkness; not yet made clear, Little of knowledge, but more of strife, Days and nights with weariness rife; While the earth's wild moan of discordant sorrow

What have you brought to me, Old Year? Life the shorter, and death more near; Dreamings ended, and hearts grown cold-Slumbering 'neath the damp earth mold. I thank you old year, for this you have taught, To hope for little, and fear for naught.

Forgive, torgive! O, sad Old Year! My, tears are dropping upon your bier, Solemnly tolls the midnight bel!-For all, Old Year, I love you well.
