[For the Delaware "Union."] Lines on the Dedication of the Monument of Gettysburg.

BY MRS. LIZZIE TORK CASE.

Ay I raise a monumnut on high I A noble structure rear to heaven! To tell where burried patriots lie, To tell where sacrifice was given To liberty.

'Tis well to consecrate the spot Where our victorious warriors sleep, To make this ground a common tomb Where freedom's unborn sons may weep In years to come.

But not alone this pile shall tell, Of Gettysburg and glory won, Our country knows the story well, And weeps for many a gallant son

On history's page their deeds will shine, A glorious place is let apart Their names are graved on freedoms shrine, And written on her immost heart Immortally.

And to her orphan boy will tell, (While pointing to his father's tomb) How that heroic father fell At Gettysburg. The summer sun rose warm and bright,

The day that glory field was won

But many a form lay cold that night

And many a hope set with that sun

The widow to this spot will come,

Of Gettysburg. Oh sainted spirts of the brave! Not vainly was your life blood given! The glorious land you died to save Is blessed with peace. Rejoice in heaven!

With us below.

Nobly she's stood the storms of war, And this the birthday of our country-Dawns on a happy land, once, more United, and forever free

Safe Beneath the Flag. BY LIZZIZ TORK CASE.

Oh! glorious flag! what joy to see (When in the midst of our despair) Our own dear banner of the free Ware out upon the morning air.

Poor toil worn refugees were we, And many a weary mile had come, To find our long last liberty To find our loved ones and our home.

Then what a tale that banner told We knew our trials now were o'er, Protected neath that sacred fold That we're safe and free once more.

Our hearts are bowed almost with awe Tears trickled from each manful eye A fairer flag we never saw, Than waved beneath that sunny sky.

Though age may turn these locks of jet With weary care my heart lie worn Yet oh! I never shall forget, The flag I saw that summer morn.

While waves that banner in the sky, Forever shall my heart be true Though false and every other tie,

I'll love that old Red, White, and Blue.
