SPRING. The yellow skies at Wrentide, The morning's crimson glow, The bare brown rocks that peep above

The swiftly less'ning snow, The swelling buds upon the trees, The mellow heat at noon, Are sweet and subtle prophecies That spring is coming soon.

The sparkling brooks freed from the ice That bound their gentle fow, The stars as soft as eyes of love, The southern winds that blow, The breaths of balm from spicy climes, Like the sweet air of June,

That spring is coming soon. The early robin on the elm, The blue bird in the bedge, The rippling of the forest spring Adown the mossy ledge, The purple haze that sails by night Between us and the moon,
