At the "Third Anniversary of the Press Club," traffics which ruin the bodies and souls of men, were saparated by friends and taken off in opof Philadelphia, the following toast was drank, and superinduce disorder in community, and retard posite directions. This occurred about noon .responded to by Mr. Brand Williamson, editor of the progress of religion and morality. It is an old, weak tale, which events have long explodithe street, he saw Johnstone coming down. As they neared each other they drew their revolvers.

From the bottom of your glasses, As this jovial hour passes, Drain to our country's lasses, The last drop of wine, To the sweet girls that caress us, When our worldly cares destress us,-To the laughing eyes that bless us, Rise, this teast of mine.

Who does not honor woman. Is more of brute than human, And by our gallant true-man, Deserves to have no place, When in cocial, friendly meeting-Our bosoms hotly beating-We send our manhood's greeting To the charmers of our race.

Our Country we have toasted, And of her glories boasted; We've around her borders coasted, And found them all "O. K.," And though the deamon Treason, Attempted for a season, Her destruction, without reason, She is stronger still to-day!

Oh! the Love we ever bore her-And that Flag which floateth o'er ber-Was to us the real restorer Of man's full liberty; And this night we all can glory, In Time's most noble story, Though writ on pages glory, Since our mother-land is free.

Then while our hearts are glowing, And Thought in statute's growing, And the cheery wine is flowing, To our country's lofty name; There's another one to honor, And our love we lavish on her, As she comes with wreathes upon her

In the day of woe and sorrow, And the dread of the To-morrow, We know that we can borrow Brave com fort from her smile. And the word of faith she breathes us, As her gentle arm enwreathes us, Is a blessing she bequeathes us,

And the balo-light of fame.

So, to Woman, yet the nearest-To dear Woman, still the dearest-Her, whose trials are severest, Passing through these earthly ways. Round the board drain all your glasses, As this jovial moment passes, And give to all the lasses
