THE CONTRAST.

GESTLENEN BEFORE MARRIAGE. My dearest duck ; my sweetest girl, I love you most sincerely; I'd rather own this sunny curl Than make a fortune yearly;

This little band, so soft and white, Was only nade for sickness; This little form, so frail and light, Was made for gandy dresses!

I'll keep my Kate a span of grays, A carriage and a poney; I'll go with her to balls and plays, And never speak of money; For her I'll buy romances new-Attending to her pleasure-And poems, bound in goid and blue,

I'll order my treasure. Our lives shall be but one sweet dream, Of love and sunny weather; No adverse wave shall cross the stream Of wedded bliss forever.

AFTER MARRIAGE. You always talk of plays and balls; You are forever flirting, And scribbling rhymes, and making calles, And never making shirting; You smile in every whiskered face, You chase all silly fashions, You load with jewels, flaunt with lace, And show your angry passions-

The baby's left to cry and moan, I've never a decent dinner; You drag me out, you call me down-I am a hen-pecked sinner-An abject slave-I tell you so ! Madame, you're full;'s ended; You shall not flirt-and-go I'm weary and offended; I'm going to a reading room-

I'll join a club thereafter-So mend your manners, stay at home, And dry your eyes with laughter ! LADY BEFORE MARRIAGE. I feel a very solemn sense Of all a woman's duty, To keep within the door-yard fence,

Unmindful of her beauty. 'Tis plain our Maker did design That woman should be humble : Not given to looks, nor dressing fine, Which makes them fret and grumble. Those novels are pernicious things To feed immagination; All filled with angels shorn of wings-To me they are vexation.

AFTER MARRIAGE. Bill! come down stairs I know you can! The baby has the colic; The way you shirk your duties, man,

Is truly diabolic ! The nurse has such a blundering way She cannot stop its crying, And as for me, I'm boused all day 'Till I am a most dy ing.

Ann, run and bring my velvet sacque, My parasol and bonnet; I'm guing to the Messrs. Black, The printers, with a sonnet! have no time to write nor read But while Hub tends the haby.

[COMMUNICATED.] Rambles and Reflections on Arlington

DEAR EDITOR:- In overlooking my personal effects yesterday, I stumbled by accident on an article with the above caption. these are much delapidated. We now enter the North East room, which in all probability was Lee's library. Here we' find musty tomes of ancient mould, conspicuous among which are Valuaire's works. Various in scriptions upon pla cards are attatched to the walls. On one side we find these lines:

"Here sleep the brave, who sink to rest, By all their country's wishes blessed." Immediately beneath, we find the solemn words Well might his thoughts assume a mournful of sublime portent, "Dulce et decorum est pro bue, when he beheld the graves of thousands of patria moit." On another wall is this clause; the victems of his inhuman and perfidious efforts. "The grave should be surrounded by everything Had it wrung tears of blood from his heart, these that might inspire tenderness and veneration for could not atone for the mourning and blight that the dead; or, that might win the living to virtue. has fallen upon many homes, or wipe out the It is not the place of disgust or dismay, but of festering load of crime that clings to him, that sorrow and meditation."

On the same wall we descover these thrilling up in eternity.

"Whether on the tented field, Or in the battle's van, The fittest place for man to die, Is where he dies for man!"

In the room is also a resolution embodying thanks to George, Washington Parke Custis for his unwavering devotion to the Irish cause .-The design is in the original chirography and sighted by prominet Irish patriots of the day .-Passing out, we discover the conservatory filled there, we enter the garden, which is contiguous, on the gardiners for artistic arrangement and excellent care. Among other beautiful plants, we will soon be removed to the green house for protection from the bighting trosts of November in another, those of the legs in the third, and of the trunk in yet another.
