A CASTLE IN THE AIR.

BY MRS. C. R. M. THOMAS. I built, in a Spanish province, A castle fair and high, It rose with towr and battlement Against the glowing sky.

In the background lay a forest, As weried and dark as night, And over all, uprose sublime, A snow-capped mountain beight.

And on the lake my gilded boat Lay gleaming like a star, And the commerce of all nations I looked on from afar.

All predicts woods and spices rare I burned for perfame, My garden held the choicest flowers That in the tropics bloom.

Each merry songster of the air . I caged for my delight, And every gorgerous bird was there With plumage gay and bright.

Of flesh, and fowl, and fish, My aervants sleepless spent the night T' invent some dainty dish. My couch was of the eider down,

My table grouned beneath the weight

With silken curtains hung, And twining vines, and buds and flowers Seemed o'er my carpets flung. And I had music of all kinds,

If pensive or if gay,

The lute, the viol and the harp,

With men well skilled to play. And dancers came with twinkling feet Whenever I did call, And cool grottoes wooed to solitude,

When mirthful scenes did pall: My guests were not of common men, Some glory each did erown; With pen, or lyre, or battle sword,

They'd won a great renown. And for this fairy home of mine I sought and won a bride, She was peerless in her beauty

And nobly born beside.

I lavished my great wealth on ber . With an unsparing hand, Her silks and diamonds well might watch With any in the land.

Here my wife came in from shopping, The babe began to cry; My cigar had burned my fingers, The smoke was in my eye.

Wife's talk was about the beaute And things she'd seen down town, And while I mused on the prices, My castle tumbled down .
