The Child's Dream.

BY MRS. E. OAKES SMITH. "What was thy dream, my daughter, dear, What was thy dream last night ?" I saw on thy little check a tear, And wept to see the sight."

"Ay, mother dear, I heard a voice Say, very mild and low-Young Alice, would you not rejoice O'er yonder stream to go ?"

"I looked, and there the saushine lay Upon a thousand flowers; And birds were fitting every way Amid the blooming bowers. I gave my hand to him who came With that mild voice to me, And then he whispered your dear name-

I turned me round to see.

"But they were something like to this-"Praise to your Redeemer I" And then I felt a sense of bliss, Singing, 'our Redeemer !' " "God strengthen me !" the mother cried, And bowed herself in paryer; She put a veil upon her head,

Cut off her shining hair;

And when she heard of those that wept, She I ent her steps that way; And when at night she should have slept, She kneeled her down to pray. "God strengthen me! God strengthen me! I cannot lose my child !" But Alice sang : "Praise unto thee, Dear Saviour, good and mild!"

The mother wrestled in her prayer, While Alice dreamed and smiled; "No tears, nor parting shall be there !" Murmered the sleeping child. The mother heard and bowed her head; "Not lost, but gone be fore!"

And whom they called young Alice dead, She wept for her no more.
