Will He Be Home To Night? A SONG OF THE "OLD LOVE AT HOME."

BY L. VIRGINIA PRENCH. The woodlands are turning brown, On rocks and river, and musical rills, The shadows are coming down. A faint blush lingers along the sky, And o'er the mountain's beight-Oh I speed dark hours like swift birds by, For he must be home to-night!

And cheeks of the richest rose. The tapers are all alight, My flowers in bloom-but-can this be fear? Oh! will be come bome to-night?

Mine eyes are bright-it's because they see . And mirror with faithful shine, If thou wilt come home to-night!

My cheek's aglow-it's because I'm drest, In his fancy's favorite hue? In this robe of the richest hue?

And I hope he will note the low, And the lighted eye and the sunny smile, Which charmed him-so long ago. I know that my summers are passing an 17; That I'm not as beautiful-quiteknow what he'll say, with his smile so gay, If he should come home to-night.

Yes-1 think he'll come-o'er the crimson keys Of my heart doth a music swell, Like the soft, sweet chiming of the distant seas Through the folds of a lonely shell; And something that's neither of earth nor sir, But endowed with an angel's might, Has met my spirit and whispered there, "Rest! he will be bome to-night!"

Oh! God be thanked! who has kept him safe In his wanderings wild and wide; And guided him back like a precious waif Astray on a stormy tide. Halthere's the train! with signal shrill, Oh! dark hours speed your flight! Ha! soul rejoice-Oh ! heart be still-He has come—he has come to-night!
