[For the Easton Gasette.] THE DREAM OF DEATH. AN EPIC POEN, IN FIVE CANTOS

W. T. PIERSON.

I saw just entering on the morn of life, A beautiful and sweetly smiling babe. No lines of care or sorrow had been traced On its fair brow, and nought but innocence And loveliness beamed from its infant face. Of its ripe flush. And pulpy lips that laid Like cherries bursting with their luscious sweets, To tempt the sensuous taste with the rich fruit, were muistened with the baimy dew of fite. Within the mother's arms, her jewell lay, Half ravished with the burning wealth of love A. P. JUMP, Oh God most high! How full of mystery Thy Providential dealings with mankind!

The rays of sunshine from his mother's smile Price only 15 cts per box-to be had at the To cheer his heart and gild his guileless way. Twas thus the babe waxed strong and passing fair, With all the grace of form and strength of limb Pertaining to the true estate of man. As sages bend with eagerness to con The musty histories of ages past So might the youth be found, mid evening's shades Intent on mastering the intricate And hidden mystery on ancient lore. The gates of science, high and massive, flew Wide open to his proud imperious will. At his behest, the ragged path to fame Grew smooth and pleasant as the mossey dell. No bar so great, no obstacle so strong As to oppose his ever onward course. Beloved by all,-by parents, strangers, friends,-With noble impulses by God impressed Upon Sis beart, the youth toiled on his way, Approaching scar to manhood's vigorous prime. LIBER III. The sturdy forest monarch towers aloft In pride before the whirlwind's carnival.

And gently folds the tender, shrinking vine Within it's strong and powerful embrace. And thus the man, perfected in the mould Of Christian excellence, doth walk the earth. But not alone-A gentler, milder form Of beauty, nestles close upon his breast. And when from toil he bends his weary steps Towards home and rest, she from their little bower Far off espying him, with easy grace Then hand in hand they seek their rustic oot Jessamine clad, between the verdant hills; Where honeysuckles from the trellis pend, And fragrant roses scent the evening air.
