THE BRAVE YOUNG PILOT.

When young Montague, the pilot of the ill-fated steamer Fashion, which was burnt on the Mississippi a few months ago, was told by his comrade to quit and there halted. He went into the house of T. Newell, entitled "The Eastern Hunters," the shore!" The pilot bravely holds the wheel, The flames beneath, he hears the roar, Yet still be guides ber burning keel-"I'll hold her till she strikes the shore!"

Around him fly, like shooting stars, A thousand sparks, eddying soar, And yet he stands, mid falling spars-"I'll hold her till she strikes the shore!"

Still pant her iron lungs -her breath Enshrouds her laboring prow; The Leviathan is in the the death, Yet firm he holds her to the shore.

Above the din of shouts and shricks, His comrade warns him, "All is o'er;" He calmly to that comrade speaks: "I'll hold her till she striks the shore."

The goodly ship's a burning wreck, But she has touched the shore; Ah! where's the hero of her deck? Alas, we'll see him never more !

His gallant form is wrapt in flame, Lost in the craft he loved so well; His be the reward of a hero's fame, Who at the post of duty fell.

He's lost! she drifts without control; But ere the bark went down, Angels, we trust, caught up his soul, And wreathed it with the martyr's crown.
