The devil came up to earth one day, And into the court-house he wended his ay Just as the attorney, with very gravence. Was proceeding to argue the points, whe case.

Now a lawyer his majesty never had seen, For in his dominions none ever had been, And he felt very curious the reason to know, Why none had been sent to the regions below.

'Twas the fault of his agents, his majesty thought, Why none of these lawyers had ever been caught, And for his own pleasure he had a desire, To come to the earth and the reason inquire. Well, the lawyer who rose with visage so grave,

Made out his opponent a consummate knave, And the Devil was really greatly amused, To hear the attorneys so greatly abused. As soon as the speaker had come to a close, The counsel opposing then flerosly arose,

And heaped such abuse on the head of the first, And made him a villein, of all men the worst. Taus they quarreled, contended and argued so long 'Twas hard to determine the one that was wrong,

Old Nick turned away and soliloquized thus-"If all they have said of each other be true, The Devil has surely been robbed of his due; I'm satisfied now 'tis all very well,

For the lawyers would rain the morals of hell." "They have puzzled the court with their villaneous was the service of the service that And I'm free to confess, that they have puzzled fusal. .
