Life.

" We are floating down the river, We shall soon be out to see; We shall soon be lost forever In its wide immensity.

We have passed the snug meadows Many and many a year ago; There the streams was small and narrow, But a little brook did flow; Now we faintly catch the music Dimly see the sunshine glow.

Far behind us are the mountains-Memory haunts their summits yet; Glorious day-dreams cluster round them, Like the trees about them set; Lovingly we turn our faces To those mountains with regret.

We were wrecked at many places Where the hidden rocks abound-Where the current swept us swiftly With a wild and surging sound; And the darkening skies above us On our doubtful fortunes frowned.

Deeper, swifter, in its course, Bears us, like the floating leaflet, Onward, with resistless force; So we scarcely note the valleys, Or the softly rounded hills-Catch the chorus of the robin, As in melodies she thrills. Moonlight softl throws her lustre O'er the river and the bay, And the daylight chases darkness, And the darkness chases day.

THE ancient Scandinavians used the antiers of stags for drinking cups. This is evidently the origin of the phrase, 'taking a horn.' PREJUDICES are like rats, and a man's mind like a trap; they get in easily, and then perhaps can't get out at all.

A Professor of Chemistry, while lecturing to a college class, said, 'Oxygen is an invisible gas; you see it in these bell glasses." THE attempt to start an asylum for useless young men failed, as no building could be constructed large enough.
