All for the Best.

All's for the best; be sanguine and cheerful; Trouble and sorrow are friends in diagnice; Nothing but folly goes faithless and fearful; Courage is forever happy and wise ; All for the hest-if a man would but know it; Providence wiches us all to be blest; This is no dream of the pundit or post;

Heaven is gracious, and-All's for the best. All's for the best ! set this on your standard Soldier of sadness, or pilgrim of love, Who to the shores of despeir may have wandered, Away wearied swallow, or heart stricken dove; All for the best | be a man but confiding, Providence tenderly governs the rest; And the frail barque of his creatures is guiding; Wisdy and wearily, all for the best.

All for the best I then Bing away terrors, Meet all your fears and your foes in the van, And in the midst of your dangers or errors, Trust like a child, while you strive like a man; All's for the best I unbiased, undoubted, Providence reigns from the East to the West And by both wiedom and mercy surrounded Hope and be happy that-All's for the best.

The Merchant,

There is a farm-house fringed with vines, And o'er its roof the sunlight shines; Where swallows sail the summer air, And pour their notes of music there.

The mifely wren bath built her nest Bang 'gainst the roof's low, modest crest, While round each plant and blossoming tree Swings in and out the humble bee.

The house-dog sent his shaggy side Mearest the porch the cat beside; Walle robin redbresst chants his song, And mocking-birds the notes prolong. There is a face within the pot-

Oh | blessed face, and ne'er forget ! Her besateens eyes turn on her boy-The mother's hope, the midow's joy. A playmate of the birds he seems,

A shape that comes to us in dreams; The shadow from the broken tree Ne'er fell as yet, my child, on thee !

There is a second of the second of Rich carvings o'er its portals frown, And silken curtains bar the way Of rising sun and noontide day.

Old paintings hang along the wall,

Stained lights upon the carpet fall; Rich mouldiage bere and there are fret, Carved woods in blue and gold are set. Upon the buffet silver gleams Where Art hath carved her choicest dreams

A face beneath the lights is there, Its lines deep graved by grief and care ; His hand, long used to count his gold, Is thin and long, and lean and cold.

With meffed feet that wake no sound.

The liv'red valet hovers 'round

There is a ship upon the sea-A golden-freighted argosy-Bearing the golden fieces from far To port where sets the Evening Star.

The merchant's thoughts are not with thee, Oh I golden-freighted argosy; But with the farm-house fringed with vines, Upon whose roof the sunlight shines.

He sums his long life o'er and o'er, His wealth, his credit, social power; But still his thoughts will wander there, Where swallows sail the summer air,

'Mid all the netes and bonds that stand His memory 'round like silver band, His fancy fondly 'scapes to thee, Thou robin's note from out the tree!

Along the chambers of the past Are busts in bronze and marble cast; Still are his thoughts within the cot, And mother's name is ne'er forgot.
