NOT TIBED OF LIFE.

BY TOM C. HARBOUGH. I heard a little school boy shout, Who sported on the beather, I never will grow tired of life,

I want to live forever.

I love that happy, little child, And meet him year from year; I saw him twine the belietrope Within his first love's hair.

On earth would part us never, For I would hear thy merry voice Forever and forever." Again I saw him when be stood

With his bride before the altar;

"Oh! Kate," he said, "I wish that des

I heard him take the sacred vow, In love he'd never faltar. And then he whispered to his love, Words spoken on the heather,

"I never will grow tired of thee-

Oh! may we live forever."

That lovely boy is now a man, And years have flitted by; Where wife and children lie.

His bair is like the driven snow, His form to age is given; "Oh I now," he cried, "I'm tired of life. I want to go to heaven."

And thus it is with all of us, When youth's fair sun is bright; When all is sunsbine, all is day, We never think of night.

But when old age o'ertakes our frames, And we are bent and gray; How anxious are we then to go To the realms of endless day !
