PROSPECTUS. BY WILLIS BARTWELL.

From this land of care and pain,-O, ye bands of shining angels, Bend your voices in the strain. I will soon be over Jordon, Where no pain can never come, Then I'l' sing the loud bosanna

Even now I see the spirits Of those loved ones gone before As around the throne they gather, Him to wership and adore; And me thinks I hear the voices, Floating through the courts above, Softly blended with the angels', In their songs of peace and love:

In my happy, happy home.

Dark and dreary are the storm clouds Floating over this world of ours, Charged with pain and sore temptations, Which descend in copious showers; Like the vile box of Pandors, Spreading misery around, They infest the world with evils,

And our hearts keep sorrow bound.

Then assist me, O my Saviour ! Now to triumph over sin, From these ills and vain delusions Ever keep my spirit clean; Then when life its pace shall slacken, And my pilgrimage shall end, I will go with joy to meet thee, My Redeemer and my Friend.

Yes, I'm coming, O, my Saviour, Let the eche sound afar, To my happy home in glory, Where there's naught our bliss to mar; I will soon be over Jordan, Where no pain can ever come, Then I'll sing the loud Hosanna,
