Wby, ab I wby must priceless jewels Gleam on lives that need them not? Or, if for one moment treasured, Flung saide, and soon forgot.

Fairest flowers spring up and blossom All uncared for, on their way, Who with idle, listless footsteps Bruise and crush them carelessly.

While the lives where gems might glitter, Provd to deck a thing so fair; All unthorned, undecked and crownless Lie forever cold and bare.

Hungry human hearts go starving O'er a dark and lonely way, While around life's choicest blessing, Love isidly flung away.

Why, alas I are royal matures Dwarfed into a narrow cell, Till how they had bloomed and broadened, Only God alone can toll?

Why must souls which He made, kindled, And by closest bonds allied-Hearts which ever beat ac cordant, Fate with cruel band divine ?

Leaving each on darksome pathway, O'er which lowers a sulken sky; Life, which might have bloomed all barren, And we can but murmur, why?

First Love.

I had just donned my first tail-coat, My whiskers had but started, When Aramiata erossed my path, And left me broken hearted. I fancied she had auburn hair, ('Twas more like a new burt brick.) Her favorite was "number one," Her gaiter number siz!

But as I pressed her freekled hand, " (A rather clumsy seven.) I shut my eyes-bade carth farewell, And dreampt I was in beaver. rowed she was etherial, An angel and a saint, I madly kissed ber blusbing cheek, Alas ! the blush was paint.

And when another she espoused, And asked we to the bridal, My brain was turned, my spirit crushed, My thought was suicidal. But somehow, with another now, I share connubial joys, And she-a buxom widow-has A dozen red haired boys.
