SELECT POETRY. From the Baltimore Saturday Night. A Bilde's Thoughts of Home.

BY VIOLET FULTER.

"Dear home," my beart still clings to thee, I bear kind voices in my dreams, Beloved faces smile on me, Beloved forms around me seem.

I live again, through happy days, When tender care was round me thrown, When all I knew of love or praise, Was from my parent's lips alone.

My mother's gent'e eyes were wet With tears of mingled grief and pride, The day the wedding feast was set, The day that I became a bride-

My gray-baired father's trembling voice, Did bless me, when the rite was done. And to the bridegroom of my choice. He gave the bride that he had won.

I left them all, my home and friends, To be the partner of his life, Who, fondly smiling, o'er me bends, And whispers the sweet name of "wife:".

Yet, take me to thy heart, dear love, My refuge in the days to come, I love thee, and my life will prove, I love thee, though I sigh for home!

THE DYING MOTHER.

We were weeping around her pillow, For we knew that she must die, It was night within our bosoms-It was night upon the sky.

There were seven of us children, I the eldest of them all, So I tried to whisper comfort, But the blinding tears would fall,

Leaned his aching brow, and wept,

O'er my hearing bosom swept. The shadow of an awful fear Came o'er me as I trod, To lay the burden of our grief

Before the throne of God.

On my knees my little brother

And my sister's long black tresses

"O, be kind to each other," Was my mother's pleading prayer, As her hand lay like a snow flake, On the baby's golden hair.

Then a glory bound her forehead, Like the glory of a crown; And in the silent sea of death Her star of life went down.

Her latest breath was borne away Upon that loving prayer; And the hand grew heavier, paler, On the baby a golden bair.

do not attain sufficient size or strength to ad mit of handling, or other disturbances, until a bout the first of November; but the heavy harrow like dredges commence dragging over the beds the first of September, and keep until June a grinding and attrition of a thousand pysters to every one that is taken, thus crashing but the life of the young, filling up the open mouths of all with the bottom, covering them up, and turn ing and leaving them in every unnatural post-

The longs, or rakes, have no such effect, they touch the beds in one small spot, gathering on that spot alone, and bring up nearly all they touch, and moreover, are not so beavy, or rough ly used, as to crush or injure either the old or young oysters. When of ster beds have become reduced to a certain degree, in our waters, they will soou cease to produce at all although the ground may be the most congenial for the purpose, as the crustaces, shell, and other fish, which prey upon them will destroy the young as fast as they assume a tangible form, and many of the old will meet the same late, and the rest die out .--Therefore, uwhere bedding is undertaken, the oyster must either be well protected, or else sown in such quantities as to enable the increase to get shead of the destruction. List season there were fire hundred and sixty-three vessels licensed to diedge for oysters. averaging twenty-three tons each, carrying about right nundred bushels at a load, and making two loads a month for market for, say seven months of the year, summing up tix million three hundred and five thousand six hundred bushels taken by the dredgers. During the same period, there were nineteen bundred and seven canoes licensed, each taking about fire bushels per day for twenty.six days of the month, and seven months of the year, making one; million, seven hundred and thirtyfive thousand, seven hundred seventy bushels taking by the tongmen, for sale, which with, say two million bushels taken during the season for 'private use.' will give an aggregate of about ten million bushels taken from the beds of Maryland annually.

The least estimate I have heard of the quantity of oysters sold in the city of Baltimore a season, is five million bushels, and it, as the present law intended, ohe cent per bushel is required to be paid, (by amending the above mentioned sections,) tity thousand dollars can be collected from this source.

We have but one small, slow steemer, with which to visit twenty five different oyster localities scattered sometimes tar apart, over tortuous routes, the extreme of which are one hundred miles from north to south, by seventy-five from east to west. I mention these facts here, because the people have been led to expect too much of this force, without considering the imperfections of the law under which it operates. The extent of our orster-beds is about three hundred and seventy-three square miles, ninety. two of which are closely covered, and the remainder scattering. This field could be made to give profitable employment to twenty thousand laborers, in a few years from this, under the administration of proper laws. .
