NONE ARE GENUINE

For the Easton Gazette. IN MEMORIAM.

Once I knew a maiden lovely, Fair ber locks of golden hair, Bright the hazel orbs adorning, Face of symmetry most rare.

Rivaling in beauty, even Roses fresh with morning dews, Or the rich and changing colors Of the rain-bow's brilliant hues.

Near Tred Avon's sparkling waters, First it was I met the maid. And beside that lovely river With its waters fair and wide;

And her hands of hilly whiteness Did within my own entwine, As I told her of my passion,

As I asked her to be mine.

And beside these sparkling waters Murm'ring o'er the pebbly shore; Pledged we there our hearts' affections, Pledged we vows, forever more.

Years have passed since then, and left me home Tossed upon life's surging wave; But the form I loved and cherished, Lies within the silent grave.

With the echoes of the past; Yet their mem'ries throng upon me, Throng upon me, thick and fast. Mem'ries of that joyous maiden,

Yes! those days alas! are numbered

Pecriess in her queenly pride; Whom I worshiped, as I wandered With her by that river's side. But, am privileged to wander

For with angels, shining angels, Treds she now, you "Golden Shore." Yet her sweet smile often greets me, Sweetly greets me oft in dreams,

With that lovely maid no more;

And in vissions here I wander. With her by the purling streams. Ah I as once I wandered with her, In those happy days of yore,

Which return, alas, no more. For a short pace from Tred Avon, Where the "weeping willows" wave, In the breeze their slender branches,

Days of pleasure, oft remembered,

Where that river's murm'ring waters Sing, acquires to the dead; While, flowers I've yearly planted, Bloom in beauty o'er her head.

May be seen my "LOST QXE's" grave.

MY LOVERS. In the carly golden morning, Waking at the break of day;

While my 'ittle, youngest darling Close beside me nestling lay, Fearing to disturb his sleeping-Lay I there and softly watched him, Ere from slumber he would wake.

One small hand his cheek supported,
One was thrown across my breast;
Boft and gentle was his breathing,
As a ... phyr sunk to rest,
On the cheek, fair, silken lashes, On the lid a smile of light-Azure veins I fondly noted,

Noble brow, and tresses bright.

As I looked he sudden opened Eyes that instant sought my own-Eyes that filled with tender love-light, While he spoke in cooing tones; "Father made a good select "When," said he, "he s'lected you; For," he added with deep fervor,

"You are good and pretty too."
