

The South.

HABEAS CORPUS.

Next to personal security, says Mr. Justice Blackstone, "the law of England regards, as sacred, the personal liberty of individuals."

Historical parallels. We hold the truth to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, and that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, among these are, life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

As to the history of the Revolution, my ideas may be peculiar, perhaps singular. What do we mean by the Revolution? The war? That was no part of the Revolution. It was only an effect and consequence of it.

Truth, being known, will prevail over artifice and misrepresentation. In such cases, men who are in possession of the truth, will not be deterred from speaking it.

Guard with jealousy and vigilance the public liberty. Support every one who appears to be a friend of the Constitution, and oppose every one who appears to be an enemy.

Where are our checks in this government?—Year after year, in the hands of your American friends, it is the oppression of the poor.

most of this Convention are of the same opinion. They have a right to be so, and they will be so, if they are not so now.

"The glorious spirit of liberty is vanishing and fast fading," said Samuel Adams, "we have, in our hands, a sword which will cut through the Gordian knot."

The King, in his reply, pledged himself "sincerely and affectionately to the support of the laws of the United States."

In the Congress of 1774, there was not one member, except Patrick Henry, who appeared to understand the meaning of the preamble of the Declaration of Independence.

As to the history of the Revolution, my ideas may be peculiar, perhaps singular. What do we mean by the Revolution? The war? That was no part of the Revolution.

Truth, being known, will prevail over artifice and misrepresentation. In such cases, men who are in possession of the truth, will not be deterred from speaking it.

Guard with jealousy and vigilance the public liberty. Support every one who appears to be a friend of the Constitution, and oppose every one who appears to be an enemy.

Where are our checks in this government?—Year after year, in the hands of your American friends, it is the oppression of the poor.

her proprietors if he acquires our cases he will effectively disarm the colony. If he has a command of troops among us, he will be able to do so.

"If the inhabitants of Boston, six thousand seven hundred and fifty-three still remained in the town, they would be a great weight upon the British."

"The loss of officers was observed to be disproportionately great; and the loss of men, in the opinion of the British, was not so great as it appeared."

"When Washington learned the fate of the rich 'empire of his own country,' for so he called Virginia, his breast heaved with waves of grief."

"The people of Maryland, happier than that of Pennsylvania, escaped intestine dissensions and party animosities, by passing over to the protection of government, and engaged in disinterested resistance."

It was a maxim of the Roman people, which evidently needed to be great, not to depart from the commonwealth. This maxim was as sacred to us as to them.

Upon the evacuation of Boston by the British, General Washington wrote a letter, from which the following is an extract, to his brother, John Augustine Washington.

"The enemy left all their works standing in the hands of the British; and formidable they are. The town has shared a much better fate than was expected."

BY THE PHILADELPHIA TRAIN.

Excitement at Philadelphia. The decisions of the great Union village of Williamsport, where JOURG REACH was so brutally murdered, are in a terrible state of consternation.

"The excitement increases here at the rate of about two per cent. per hour. All day the hills about the opposite side of the river, with the Cavalry, riding and racing in various directions."

"The loss of officers was observed to be disproportionately great; and the loss of men, in the opinion of the British, was not so great as it appeared."

"When Washington learned the fate of the rich 'empire of his own country,' for so he called Virginia, his breast heaved with waves of grief."

"The people of Maryland, happier than that of Pennsylvania, escaped intestine dissensions and party animosities, by passing over to the protection of government, and engaged in disinterested resistance."

It was a maxim of the Roman people, which evidently needed to be great, not to depart from the commonwealth. This maxim was as sacred to us as to them.

Upon the evacuation of Boston by the British, General Washington wrote a letter, from which the following is an extract, to his brother, John Augustine Washington.

"The enemy left all their works standing in the hands of the British; and formidable they are. The town has shared a much better fate than was expected."

THE WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT OF THE TRIBUNE.

One of our correspondents has just returned from a general reconnoissance, and has found the enemy everywhere. The only sign of the enemy which he could discover with a glass, was a pale yellow flag, indicating the presence of the Federal troops.

"The excitement increases here at the rate of about two per cent. per hour. All day the hills about the opposite side of the river, with the Cavalry, riding and racing in various directions."

"The loss of officers was observed to be disproportionately great; and the loss of men, in the opinion of the British, was not so great as it appeared."

"When Washington learned the fate of the rich 'empire of his own country,' for so he called Virginia, his breast heaved with waves of grief."

"The people of Maryland, happier than that of Pennsylvania, escaped intestine dissensions and party animosities, by passing over to the protection of government, and engaged in disinterested resistance."

It was a maxim of the Roman people, which evidently needed to be great, not to depart from the commonwealth. This maxim was as sacred to us as to them.

Upon the evacuation of Boston by the British, General Washington wrote a letter, from which the following is an extract, to his brother, John Augustine Washington.

"The enemy left all their works standing in the hands of the British; and formidable they are. The town has shared a much better fate than was expected."

A PALE ALARM—WAR PREPARATIONS.

WASHINGTON, June 22.—At 4 o'clock this morning one of the camps, about a half mile from Georgetown, was thrown into alarm and the men called to quarters, but the commotion soon subsided. It may have been occasioned by firing at the pickets, according to an agreement that has been made between the Confederates and the Federal troops.

"The excitement increases here at the rate of about two per cent. per hour. All day the hills about the opposite side of the river, with the Cavalry, riding and racing in various directions."

"The loss of officers was observed to be disproportionately great; and the loss of men, in the opinion of the British, was not so great as it appeared."

"When Washington learned the fate of the rich 'empire of his own country,' for so he called Virginia, his breast heaved with waves of grief."

"The people of Maryland, happier than that of Pennsylvania, escaped intestine dissensions and party animosities, by passing over to the protection of government, and engaged in disinterested resistance."

It was a maxim of the Roman people, which evidently needed to be great, not to depart from the commonwealth. This maxim was as sacred to us as to them.

Upon the evacuation of Boston by the British, General Washington wrote a letter, from which the following is an extract, to his brother, John Augustine Washington.

"The enemy left all their works standing in the hands of the British; and formidable they are. The town has shared a much better fate than was expected."

FERTILIZERS AND SEEDS.

J. J. & F. TURNER, No. 42 Pratt Street, Baltimore. Importers and Dealers in every description of GUANO.

SOLELY PROPRIETORS. HAMBLETON, BROTHERS & CO. FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC DRY GOODS.

5,000 LOTS NEW YORK AUCTION BARGAINS. MOST DESIRABLE AND CHEAPEST GOODS EVER OPENED IN BALTIMORE.

One Thousand Pieces Dress Goods LESS THAN HALF PRICE. JOHN T. WATKINS, MANUFACTURER AND DEALER IN CABINET FURNITURE.

STEAM MARBLE WORKS, Cor. North and Monument Sts., BALTIMORE. Monument, Grave Stones, Mantels, Table Tops, Tiles for Floors.

BOOK AND JOB PRINTING. SAMUEL S. MILLS, BOOK AND JOB PRINTING ESTABLISHMENT, No. 122 BALTIMORE STREET.

LEONARD PASSANO, IMPORTER AND DEALER IN GERMAN ENGLISH AND DOMESTIC FANCY GOODS AND NOTIONS, 32 Centre Market Space, BALTIMORE, MARYLAND.

TO THE PUBLIC. ALL POSTERS AND ADVERTISEMENTS TO BE SENT TO THE PUBLISHERS, No. 122 BALTIMORE STREET, BALTIMORE, MARYLAND.