Suspension of Specie Payments.

From the N. Y. Journal of Commerce. We noticed briefly on Friday the act which Cabinet, who must have more accurate knowledge hastily passed both Houses of Congress, virtually of southern strength and resources than the mass abandoning the sub-treasury system, which has of the people. slightest touch. As a fitting accompanient to this paper money scheme, Congress has, in a few brief words, enacted a statute to break down the sub-treasury system, which has been strengthening each year of its existence in the public esteem. It is provided that "instead of gold and silver being immediate-General Assembly adjourns on Wednesday, the 7th ly paid into the treasury, as now required, the instant, it adjourn to meet at Annapolis, on Tuesmoney derived from the loan may remain in solvent banks until it shall be drawn out in pursu- day, the 17th of September. ance of law." Of course, all banks in which these large amounts shall be deposited, will be was substituted for Annapolis as the place of meeting, and the report as amended was then, advent, until the money is drawn for, when they may not be able to respond.

But it is not of this we propose to speak. The risk of loss would be reckoned by many to be of small account. Nor do we care to dwell upon the demoralizing effect of such a provision; the scrambling among a variety of hungry institutions for their share of the deposit, or the greedy Goldsboro, of the United States steamer Union, partisanship clamorous for reward out of the publie funds. The very thought of such a scene is too sickening for comfort. But we may look for . a moment at the object of this disposition of the loan. It is doubtless to provide for a reserve fund as a basis for the immense paper superstructure of which we have spoken. The banks may subscribe to this loan, take their bonds in payment, draw interest on the same, and still retain the money for their own use, as a Government ed her cargo. deposit. Of course it will not lie idle. The inflation once begun, they will be besieged by borrowers, and the capital soon be let out to their customers. The Government will not want until the pressure comes, and that will be the very moment when the banks cannot pay it

Then look out for the bitter end. But it may be asked, what is the Government to do? It must have a large amount of means, and if it cannot grasp the substance, why blame it for making shift with the shadow?--We answer, because the illusion is worse than a vanityit is absolute ruin. Who says that we cannot secure the substance? If the States remaining in the Union were called upon in plain terms to pay into the treasury a tax of thirty to fifty million of dollars, the sum of three hundred millions combe borrowed here and in Europe, not in paper promises, but in hard cash, which would go as far as five hundred millions of representative capital, even though the latter were nominally at par. The fear to levy such a tax, which has been manitested at Washington, has done more to weaken i the confidence of capitalists in our cause than I could have been done by a dozen defeats of our arms. Who will believe that the people are wil- | ling to be taxed for the war, if their own representatives dare not meet them upon such an issue. And it the people will not bear their just proportion of the expense of the war, they cannot desire its continuance. This is the inevitable conclusion of the argument; and Congress has deliberately sanctioned it by its evasion of the policy recommended. It has nominally passed a direct tax bill, but, like the money it proposes to issue. the measure is only a shadow of what it professes to be, and lays its burden only upon those who are supposed to be incapable of resenting it. now remains for the Secretary of the Treasury to i carry out these measures; and all that we conhope is, that this will be done in a way to disturb as little as possible the financial relations of the replied: "Sir, I have not the pleasure of your, country.
