"A town meeting of Boston had been called at the Old South Church, in consequence of some new aggression upon the rights of the people. The different orators of the patriot party had in turn addressed the meeting, loud in complaint and accusation, but guarded and cautious on every point which | might look like an approach towards treasonable expressions, or direct exhortations to resistance. Adams placed himself in the pulpit, and sat quietly, listening to all their harangues; at length he rose and made a few remarks, which he closed with the) following pithy apologue: "A Grecian philosopher who was lying asleep on the grass, was suddenly i roused by the bite of some animal on the palm of , his hand. He closed his hand quickly as he awoke, and found he had caught in it a small field mouse. As he was examining the little animal which had dared to attack him, it bit him unexpectedly a second time: he dropped it, and it escaped. Now, fellow-citizens, what think you was the reflection there is no animal, Aucerer weak and contemptible, which the fate of kings and nations is suspended.—
