FARM WORK FOR NOVEMBER. We have but few remarks that we can venture upon in regard to Farm Work during this month.

Wherever hogs are fattened in the best and quickest manner and therefore the most economical, it is a great point gained to have good pens constructed with sleeping apartments attached.

Collecting materials for manure. All kinds of rough material—leaves, woods earth, marsh muck, the scrapings of ditches, the turf of hedge rows, &c., &c., should be collected during this month, and either hauled into the barn-yard or into the field for the purpose of being converted into compost.

Fall and winter ploughing. All stiff adhesive clays, as we remarked last month, are benefited by being ploughed in the autumn and left rough to the action of the frost during the winter months.

Roots of all kinds. Dig and store these away before they are injured by frost.

Milk cows and young cattle. These should be well cared for. Comfortable shelter is indispensable, and will be found not only conducive to their health but also a positive saving in the way of food.

Working animals. The same consideration should be given to working animals as to milk cows. Good shelter they should have, and good bedding. They should be carried regularly—fed at least twice a day, and well bedded, and they should have ready access to pure water.

Apples. The late apples will keep much better if they are gathered by hand, so as to prevent them from becoming bruised. In storing them away place them in a room that is moderately cool, but not one in which they will be apt to be touched by the frost.

Draining of wet lands. This work may still be done, and in many cases the labour of the farm could not be more profitably employed.

Wagons, farm implements, &c. We have already spoken of the advantage to be derived from carefully inspecting these and repairing such as need it. We may also add here that all the vehicles and implements and machinery which are used upon a farm should be stored away under cover when not in use.

Many people, like fairy tales, are simple in person, but contain some subtle maxim, some cunning truth, in their moral.

OLD FOGY DOCTRINES.

"We hold these truths to be self-evident that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

You, sir, we wish for peace, but how is that blessing to be preserved? I shall repeat there a saying that I have heard in the days of our youth...

The King, in his reply, pledged himself speedily and effectively to enforce obedience to the laws and the authority of the supreme legislative power...

As to the history of the Revolution, we need say no more. It was only an effect and consequence of the Revolution. It was only a part of the sequence of it.

The honorable gentleman who presided, told us that to prevent the Convention from being a mere party caucus, and to prevent the Convention from being a mere party caucus, and to prevent the Convention from being a mere party caucus...

Upon the whole it has been the policy of the British authority to oblige us to supply our wants at their market, which is the dearest in the known world, and to cramp and confine our trade so as to be dependent on their commerce...

Our liberties and safety cannot be depended upon by the King of Great Britain should be allowed to hold our forts and canons, or to have authority over a single regiment in America or a single ship of war in her ports.

"Here," said Mayhew, as he lamented the cold and hesitancy of the timid good, and for himself and the sturdy patriots, "an independent and a patriotic man here, there are many who see the right, and yet the wrong passage. But it is my hard resolution, notwithstanding many discouragements, to let my country, that neither the republic nor the churches of New England may sustain an injury."

"That in truth the cry of Danmore did not rouse among the Africans a passion for freedom. To them bondage in Virginia was not a lower condition of being than their former state; they had no notion of being treated as a race of slaves; their memories were prompt to demand for political changes; no struggling aspirations of theirs had been invited to the surface."

"When Washington learned the fate of the rich 'emporium of his own country' for so he called Virginia, his breast heaved with waves of anger and grief; 'I hope,' said he, 'this and the threatened devastation of other places will unite the nation which seems lost to every sense of virtue and those feelings which distinguish a civilized people from the most barbarous savages.'"

"The loss of officers was observed to be disproportionately great; and the gloom in the quarters of the British was deepened by the reflection that they had fought not against an enemy, but against their fellow-subjects and kindred; not for the promotion of civil or religious freedom, but for the supremacy of one part of the empire over another."

"The wife of Colonel Pinckney is distinguished as one of those heroic and self-sacrificing women of the revolution, whose integrity and fortitude lent noble support to the cause of their country."
