'Tis she 'tis she the huntress queen, Who leads the chase along the sky, Yet loved to sweep the meadows green Of pleasant Thessaly!-Who left her palace of the stars, To sleep amid the leafy spars; And stole, beneath the clock of day, (Her standard of the mounlight furl'd.) to wander where earth's fountains play, And baunt the valleys of the world; Who sought the roice of earthly rills. To full her with their sighing flight, Though she may sleep on heaven's bill. Where play the founts of light! Who leaned to hear, the woods among, Pan's low and melancholy song, That sweetest song,-though in her cars, The myriad starry lyres on high Pour forth the masic of the spheres, To greet her glorious eye! and this is she who turned away From all the loving shades of light. That hung about her haunted way, And did their homage in her sight,-And, gliding with her silver feet, At even, when the winds were still, Came down, a mortal heart to meet. Upon the Latmos bill,-And watched him, with her looks of light, Through all the long and lonely night! Alas! that she should wander forth From all the fadeless bowers on high, To plack the passion-flowers of earth, That only bloom, to die!
