

The South.

THE BETRAYED.

They are to be wedded to-morrow,
I'll twine me a garland to-night;
If tears from my eyes are overflowing,
They'll not make the roses less bright.

I'll call to my cheek a rich fishing,
The haughtiest heft of pride;
My eyes shall flash brighter and darker
Than those of his beautiful bride.

They are to be wedded to-morrow—
That morn we never shall see;
Though it spring from the east with rejoicing,
It dawns not for him or for me.

My dagger shall drink to our meeting,
Ere midnight—dead, watch shall have down,
And while his heart's blood stains its gleaming,
I'll bury it deep in my own.
