A RICH SCENE. The New York correspondent of the Philadelphia Inquirer furnishes the following account of a rich affair. He says:

The New York Chamber of Commerce has long passed as probably the most intensely respectable DINNER, TEA AND DESSERT SERVICES, aggregation of social, financial and commercial) propriety in the metropolis. It includes, in its membership, you know, all the wise men of Gotham, and a good many of the rich old fellows. who hang out their golden shingles in those palatial mansions up in the Flfth Avenue. They were i never known to joke. Their discussions usually partake of the duil and the dismal-hinging, as ther always do, on "statistics," and things in the "cotton and sugar line." The myings and doings at their meeting to-day, however, must be accepted as a brilliant exception to the general rule, and I fear when the report of) them reaches London, the Times there will refer to) it as another indication of the 'low order of cir-) ilization" at present existing in "our best socie-) tr." After the transaction of some routine busi-) ness (I quote from the Ecening Express:)

vited to inspect what he could onl call a nonde-) script, (the Stevens Battery,) on Saturday next. It was for the members to decide whether they would attend. He did not think the Battery would ever come to anything " Mr. Phelps did not know what the Chamber had to do with it. What did they know of batteries? (Laughter.) He did not think such a) duty came within the province of the merchants i of the city. A committee had reported hostile to the battery, and that was sufficient without appointing at other. Gen. Wetmore said it was well known that the defences of the barbor were in an inefficient condition, and that they were at the mercy of any foreign power which might choose to attack) Mr. Denning Duer was surprised at such a statement. The last speaker had asked what the Chamber had to do with the harbor defences, but who were more interested in them than the merchants? Let the committee be appointed to inspect the battery and make a report which may receive the approbation of the Chamber.
