CARRIERS.

We desire to say to our friends that we have now a competent force of carriers to furnish subscribers in any part of the city. The persons in this employ have been carefully selected, and no fear need be felt of miscarriages, accidents excepted. Orders can be left at the office.

THE IMPENDING BLOW.

The intelligence which we publish to-day from Fortress Monroe and the West, indicates clearly that a great movement is on foot on the part of the Government to crush out the contumacious "rebels" of the South. The great expedition down the Mississippi has sailed, and a large force has been landed at Mayfield, a town very near Columbus, Ky. The Green river bridge has been completed, and the column of central Kentucky is now ready to move against the Confederates at Bowling Green. In Eastern Kentucky, General Garfield is prepared to assail Humphrey Marshal at Prestonburg. In Western Virginia, the Federals are on the move, and Gen. Banks is girding up his loins to participate in the general movement. McClellan is preparing to assail Manassas, Hooker is awaiting the opportunity to cross the Lower Potomac, Wool only awaits the signal to march upon Yorktown, while the Burnside Expedition, it is said, is destined to attack Norfolk in front and rear. Subordinate to these grand movements are the operations of General Sherman at Port Royal, of Col. Brown at Pensacola, and of General Phelps at Ship Island. Here is presented a grand, gigantic, anaconda scheme, which, failing in some of its enterprises, may be successful in others. If it results luckily in its most important endeavors, the Confederates will be driven into the interior, and compelled to continue the war at no little disadvantage. If, on the other hand, the efforts in particular directions fail, we do not see where the money is to come from to get up other great armaments. This is a struggle of life and death, and one or the other, as far as this Government is concerned, hang upon the issue. May God speed the right!

THE CORN AND FLOUR EXCHANGE

The opponents of secession are now its strongest advocates. The minority of the Corn Exchange, having been whipped in a fair election, have seceded, and not liking the political views of certain gentlemen, whose business qualifications are undoubted, have applied political tests, and in solemn conclave have stated their grievances in ponderous resolutions, and determined to organize an independent association. These are Union men par excellence, who hope by an exhibition of patriotism to bag fat Government contracts. The Corn Exchange can survive without them.

HICKS.

The report is current in the streets to-day, and comes from very good sources, that our late Governor, whose departure we announced the other day, has been promoted to the position of Major General in the United States Army, and is expected to supersede General Dix in the command of the Department of Maryland. This is substituting King Stork for King Log. All hail to Hicks, redivivus.

A SHARP CORRESPONDENT.

A person who signs himself "Decency," has addressed us upon the subject of an article which appeared in our local columns last Saturday. If "Decency" had cultivated another virtue, called "Charity," he might have arrived at the conclusion that in the hurry and haste of business, some things may occasionally get into portions of our paper without undergoing the careful supervision which we usually bestow. Had we have seen the obnoxious paragraph, it would not have appeared.

MARYLAND INSTITUTE LECTURES.

The Fourth Lecture of the Course will be delivered next Tuesday evening by the Rev. George P. Hays, of Baltimore. The theme selected for discussion will be "Inaccuracy, Exaggeration and Falsehood," and from the acknowledged abilities of the gentleman the visitors of the Institute may anticipate a very instructive and entertaining lecture. In addition to the lecture, S. Sands Mills, Esq., at the request of the Committee, will deliver two Selections from the Poets.

WHO IS HE?

Henry Caswall, of Figheldean Vicarage, England, calls attention through the columns of the London Guardian to the following letter, written, it is stated, by "a distinguished clergyman of Maryland, well known for his almost enthusiastic regard for old England":

MARYLAND, U. S., Dec. 2, 1861.

I must repeat what I have often said before, that I write under a feeling (for humanity and for England as the great protector of the interests of civilization) wholly superior to mere love of country. I do love my native country, now, as never before. But on every account I love England more as my mother country from which all that is dear to me in America is derived. This feeling towards England is too strong in me to be shaken by any untoward things of the moment. Should the present generation of Englishmen provoke a war with us, and succeed in inflicting great miseries on us, it would not change my feelings towards England. I know that a generation will succeed to bewail the folly of this age, and that the grand unalterable facts which make England and America allies must in the end prevail. But shall there be no one to protest against the folly and madness of the hour! Every steamer that arrives brings new fuel to the flame now beginning to burn among us against Old England. It is not in human nature to endure such insulting language as is perpetually used by the ——, the ——, &c. &c., and virtually repeated by leading public men at dinners and the like occasions, to the scandal of justice and mercy. I do not wonder that the mass of my countrymen are enraged by it, nor that they daily invoke great Nemesis, and await an opportunity, which is sure to come, of revenge and retaliation. Shall a few Dissenters be the only ones in England to lift a voice against such unreasonable and galling provocation?

I have never seen the man among us who asks any material aid from England. We did expect her moral support, and we feel entitled to that; not that she can be expected to admire our republican institutions, but that she ought to feel an interest in the good order of nations, in the peace of society, and the enforcement of law—to say nothing about this war as directly waged against the extension of slavery and of the slave-trade. True, it is not an abolition war, we cannot stir up servile insurrection, and we deserve credit for not doing so, considering our tremendous temptation. But is it nothing to resist the propagation of the curse; is it nothing to say, "If thus far, no further?" We feel that we ought to have the moral support of England; but let that go. If only she will not insult us, scoff at us, exult over our sufferings, and take the disruption of our republic as a fait accompli, all might be well.

I wish you could see, as I do daily, the desponding looks of our best Bishops and laymen—men whose fidelity to everything English has been like the loyalty you have at home. Now they say to me, "Well, what have you to say now for Motherland?" The efforts of our lives are lost. We have preached up England as the great nation that might be depended on in every struggle against wrong and outrage, against oppression and sedition, and here she is giving all her moral power to a seditious Confederacy."

Such is the spirit of conversations which I hear everywhere among men who, if there be worth and character on this continent, are best entitled to be heard. The Times and other public organs are miserably deceived. Unless England and France do us the gigantic wrong of setting the "Confederacy" on its legs, we shall destroy it and resume our sway over our own. We are persuaded the South is as really ours as Wales is England's. Let us alone, and we can solve the problem how to repossess it, and how to give it back the privileges and blessings it has so madly forfeited.

The question is, who is the Maryland divine who has written the above epistle, and who compares the relation of the South to the United States with that of Wales to England. Of course he must be a Northern man and it is surmised that he is a Baltimorean by adoption, but not the less an incurable Yankee.

From the Richmond Whig, 25th ult.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE IN RICHMOND.

An Arrival from London.

We had the pleasure of an interview yesterday with Mr. Fry, of Mobile a young man of much intelligence, who has just returned from Europe; who, in addition to despatches to the President from our Commissioners, and London papers, communicates intelligence of a most gratifying character in regard to the feeling of the English people, and the purposes of their Government toward the Confederate States. Mr. Fry left London on the 10th of November, on board the British steamer Gladiator, laden with 30,000 Enfield rifles, 200 tons of powder, sabres, pistols, medicines, surgical instruments, camp utensils, etc., for the Confederate States. The 9th of this month the Gladiator entered the harbor of Nassau, for the purpose of coaling, and to receive instructions as to the Confederate port she should approach. On the second day after the United States gunboat Flambeau made its appearance in the harbor, sent thither for the special purpose of intercepting the Gladiator. There they both lie now—the Gladiator afraid to venture out, and the Flambeau not daring to lay hands on her; and there they are likely to remain until Great Britain enters the ring, when not only will the Gladiator be convoyed over to a Confederate port, but the Flambeau be picked up and brought along with her.

The cargo of the Gladiator is in charge of D. T. Bisbie, Esq., of Norfolk. Mr. Fry left Nassau to-day a week ago, and reached Richmond last Sunday, by a route and by means that we do not disclose. He assures us that, whether in Nassau, in London, or in Paris, he heard but one sentiment expressed, that of cordial good will for the Confederate States, and the hope and conviction that they would triumph. Even before the outrage on the Trent, so strong was the pressure of feeling in England against the North, that Mr. Yancey firmly believed, and positively assured Mr. Fry, that no more than a month from his departure (the 10th of November) would elapse before the blockade would be broken. Mr. Fry entertains no doubt that Great Britain will declare war, and is of opinion that France will unite in the act.

On the above subject, the Richmond correspondent of the Memphis Appeal writes as follows:

"A gentleman arrived in town to-day from Europe, via Nassau and the steamer Gordon. He reports the state of feeling in both England and on the Continent as decidedly in favor of the cause of the Confederates against the United States, and thinks a war inevitable with Great Britain, if not with France. At Nassau the Gladiator lay hemmed in by the Flambeau, which at one time threatened to make her way into the port and cut out the coveted prize, whereupon the feeling of the Islanders rose to fever heat, and they armed themselves to repel such an effort at all hazards. There can be little question that the sympathies of the Colonies of European Powers in American waters are with us, as witness the recent escape of the Sumter, in spite of the preconcerted blue-light signals, and the vigilance of Commander of the Iroquois."

From the Richmond Dispatch.

A BACK OUT.

"All hell shall gape for this."—Shakespeare.

Among the many striking portraits which the great dramatist has drawn, there is none truer to nature than that of Ancient Pistol. His swagger, his bluster, his bold front, his cowardly heart, his rant, his fustian, his strange oaths, have in them something inimitably ludicrous. His braggadocia and big talk impose for some time even on the men of such an army as that which Henry V. led into France, and which won for him the ever-memorable field of Agincourt. At last, grown bold by long impunity, he ventures too far, and his exposure is complete. A Welsh gentleman of dauntless courage, but odd demeanor, becomes the subject of his insolence. He laughs at his broken English and derides his nation. The national plant—the leek—becomes the subject of his scurrilous impertinence. He finds that he has—to use an American phrase—"waked up the wrong passenger." The gentleman is a man who does not understand jesting, specially at the expense of his country. He puts up with the affront when first received, because they are on the eve of a great battle; but, the victory once won, his first step is to seek the aggressor, and to call him to account. He finds Pistol, presents him with a leek, (the national emblem which he had derided,) and tells him he must swallow it. The bully swears and swaggers. The Welchman does neither. He is perfectly calm, but still presents the leek, and tells Pistol he must swallow it. Upon further refusal, he proceeds to beat him without mercy. This was more than "mine Ancient" had bargained for. Nevertheless, he at last gulped it down, protesting with thundering oaths that hereafter his persecutor should be made to pay the penalty. He is treated with contempt, sneaks off, and we hear of him no more.

If the Yankee Government have not enacted the part of "Ancient Pistol" to the very life, in their embroilment with the English Government, then there is no such thing as imitation, and parallel cases cannot exist in nature. When the piratical onslaught was first made upon the British vessel, the yell of exultation which arose in Yankeedom, resounded throughout the world. Vast meetings assembled to testify their admiration of the deed. City Councils voted it unrivalled in daring and sagacity since the days of Bayard.—The press rang with applause. The Secretary of State hastened with his meed of praise. The Secretary of the Navy was not slow in approving the deed. Congress hailed the rising glory of the new hero, and testified their approbation of his exploit, without a dessenting voice. The city of Boston dined him, and wined him, and listened to his narrative, and made the welkin ring with its applause. The newspapers vowed that they would see every American ship burned, and every Yankee town and city uprooted from the very foundation, before they would shrink from the side of Wilkes. They were determined to back him at all hazards, and to the last extremity.—Never was there such defiance as they hurled at England. Never was there so much insolence uttered upon any one occasion. Never were such threats heard before since the creation of the world. The Herald led the way in these demonstrations. It was going to raise a million of men to overrun and devour Canada. It was going to fit out six thousand privateers to cruise against English merchandise. It was going to confiscate nine hundred millions of English property. It would not let England have a pound of cotton. It would get saltpetre from the mammoth cave. If England dared to demand redress, it was determined to raise an insurrection in Ireland.

Nevergaas there anything like the ribaldry, gasconade, bully, bluster, and defiance in which the whole Yankee people, press, public meetings, Congress, Secretaries and all indulged. They have been compared to the Chinese, and we think with wonderful aptitude. But the Chinese never swaggered in this style. And after all, what has been the result? The Yankee fire-eaters have drawn back from the first piece of live coal presented them. The Yankee swaggerers have been the first to eat their own words as soon as it was ordered them. The Yankee Congress, who unanimously approved of Wilkes, abandon him upon the very first intimation that it might cost them something to hold on to him. And Bennett, instead of eating up Canada, instead of exciting an insurrection in Ireland, instead of fitting out six thousand ships to cruise against British property, coolly advises the Yankee Government to knock under, and, in the very spirit of Ancient Pistol, cries, "All hell shall gape for this" hereafter! Wonderful people! wonderful press! wonderful Congress! wonderful Secretaries! wonderful Yankeedom! Certainly the world never saw your like before. Even Egypt, "the basest of kingdoms," is respectable when compared to you.

CITY ITEMS

Front Street Theatre.—Front street Theatre was crowded last night on occasion of a benefit to the charming danseuse, Senorita Cubas, the character of the audience being of the first order, who, from their repeated manifestations of applause, gave tokens of their appreciation of this lady's skill and grace.

The lovers of the Terpsichorean art will bear in mind that this evening closes the engagement of this wonderful artiste, and should profit by the only opportunity left to gratify their tastes. Senorita Cubas will appear to-night in two of her best efforts—La Folie, the French school, and the difficult and beautiful El Ole, a classical Spanish production. She will be most ably assisted by Senor Ximenes and the excellent Corps de Ballet. In connection with the above performance there will be a dramatic entertainment, consistising of the farce entitled, "A Momentous Question," and the drama of "Jack Sheppard," in which pieces the whole strength of the company will be called into requisition.

The Living Wonders.—These wonderful curiosities, now at the Baltimore Museum, are being daily visited by crowds of our citizens, who, after a thorough inspection, leave the exhibition fully convinced that they have seen a sight really astounding. The collection consists of a huge living Walrus, or Sea Lion, the Albino Family, and the inexplicable "What is it?" which, to be appreciated, must be seen. For full particulars see advertisement.

Arrival of Government Wagons.—About one hundred transportation wagons belonging to the U. S. Government reached here this morning from Perryville, and are being rapidly sent forward to Annapolis. They are destined to accompany the Burnside Expedition. Some six hundred mules also came with them. The wagons looked well enough but the mules seemed the worse for wear.

A New Police Order.—The Provost Marshal yesterday issued an order prohibiting any policeman from entering any public house for the purpose of lounging or idling their time away, which amusement has been indulged in to a considerable extent lately, to the detriment of the public interests and morals of the officers.

Interesting to the Ladies.—By reference to the advertisements of Mr. E. Bonney, in another column, the ladies will find he has reduced the prices for all his goods to the panic scale. Mr. Bonney has an excellent stock of all kinds of Fancy and Millinery Goods, of the latest styles and importations.

To Epicures.—It is the happy priv. of our friend John C. Thomas, late Thomas Brothers, to offer to epicures and mutton-lovers a choice lot of very superior Southdown, from those world-famed breeders, Colonel Floyd and W. Goldsborough, Esq. They can be served at all the markets.

Personal.—George D. Prentice, so widely known in connection with the Louisville Journal, arrived in town last night, took rooms at Barnum's Hotel and passed on to Washington this morning.

To Families.—William H. McLean, Charles street, calls attention, through our columns, to his large and varied assortment of Family Groceries.
