CHILDHOOD AND HIS VISITORS.

BY W. W. [illegible]

Once on a time, when sunny May
  Was kissing up the April showers,
I saw fair CHILDHOOD hard at play
  Upon a bank of blushing flowers;
Happy—he knew not whence or how;
  And smiling—who could choose but love him?
For not more glad than CHILDHOOD's brow,
  Was the blue heaven that beamed above him.

Old TIME in most appalling wrath,
  That valley's green repose invaded;
The brook grew dry upon his path,
  The birds were mute, the lillies faded;
But TIME so swiftly winged his flight,
  In haste a Grecian tomb to batter,
That CHILDHOOD watched his paper kite,
  And knew just nothing of the matter.

With curling lip, and glancing eye,
  GUILT gazed upon the scene a minute,
But CHILDHOOD's glance of purity
  Had such a holy spell within it,
That the dark demon to the air
  Spread forth again his baffled pinion,
And hid his envy and despair,
  Self tortured, in his own dominion.

Then stepped a gloomy phantom up,
  Pale cypress-crowned, Night's awful daughter,
And proffered him a fearful cup,
  Full to the brim of bitter water:
Poor CHILDHOOD bade her tell her name
  And when the beldame muttered "Sorrow,"
He said,—"Don't interrupt my game;
  I'll taste it, if I must, to-morrow."

The MUSE of Pindus thither came,
  And wooed him with the softest numbers
That ever scattered wealth and fame
  Upon a youthful poet's slumbers;
Though sweet the music of the lay,
  To CHILDHOOD, it was all a riddle,
And "Oh," he cried "do send away
  That noisy woman with that fiddle."

Then WISDOM stole his bat and ball,
  And taught him with most sage endeavor,
Why bubbles rise, and acorns fall,
  And why no toy may last forever;
She talked of all the wondrous laws
  Which NATURE's open book discloses,
And CHILDHOOD, ere she made a pause,
  Was fast asleep among the roses.

Sleep on, sleep on! Oh! MANHOOD's dreams
  Are all of earthly pain or pleasure,
Of GLORY's toils, AMBITION's schemes,
  Of cherished love, or hoarded treasure;
But to the couch where CHILDHOOD lies
  A more delicious trance is given,
Lit up by rays from seraph eyes,
  And glimpses of remembered heaven!

THE BURNSIDE EXPEDITION.

Were our information positive and official as to the destination of the Burnside Expedition, it would, of course, be our duty not to reveal it; but as the ships are reported to have passed Cape Henry, bound outward, and as this must necessarily give rise to speculation, there can be no harm in discussing certain known facts, which will convey no information to the enemy that the expedition itself has not already carried them.

The vessels under Commodore Goldsborough are intended, it is well known, for inland navigation. It was conjectured, therefore, that their destination was one or more of the great streams of Virginia. That they are not going there, at least now, is clear, for they have turned their prows southward and gone out to sea. We can hardly be amiss if we presume the inland and shallow seas of Albemarle and Pamlico Sounds to be the aim, and if that be so they are there already. Their errand there must be to finish the work so well begun four months and a half ago by General Butler and Commodore Stringham, but which, for some reason never yet explained, they abandoned on the threshold.

There is more than one point on that coast at which the rebellion can be struck a telling blow. When the fleet enters Albemarle Sound, whether at one of the northernmost inlets, perhaps the Currituck, or Hatteras Inlet, it may first aim for Currituck Sound, the outlet of North River.—North River is connected with Norfolk by the Albemarle Canal, and has been, all Summer long, the convenient back door of access to that city.—It seems a great while ago since we showed how very convenient this was for the Rebels, and how very inefficient a blockade of Norfolk, at the Capes, was, so long as the Sound and this Canal were left open for small craft to creep in and out, as they have done ever since the war began; but we believe, after all, that it is only about six months since we discussed the subject. It may, then, be one of the purposes of this expedition to close this door effectually; and it is not impossible that the still more effective measure may be resorted to of taking the road that leads to it, and entering Richmond itself in this back way. It would certainly be a brilliant, and it may be that it is not an impossible feat. At any rate that whole southern coast of Virginia can be threatened and taken possession of at certain points, while other portions of the fleet can press on to Pamlico Sound, and either reduce all Eastern North Carolina to obedience, or secure its allegiance, as the case may be.

But to do this, Roanoke Island, which commands the waters connecting the two Sounds, must first be reduced and held; and here, perhaps, we may hear of some hard fighting, unless the Island be already abandoned. But this once carried, and Pamlico Sound is open to the Expedition. Before entering this, however, or simultaneously, as may seem best, forces may go up the Chowan River, whence, at another point, Norfolk may be threatened in the rear, and what, perhaps, is of more consequence, Weldon, in North Carolina, may be taken, where the railroads from Norfolk and Richmond, southward to Raleigh and Charleston, form a junction. The possession of Weldon and Hicksford, a little distance north of it, would cut off the railroad communication with Eastern Virginia and the South Atlantic States. Any operations in Pamlico Sound would be rendered all the easier by so important a possession.

Beauregard, with his railroad communication cut off in his rear, and McClellan threatening him in front, must leave the Carolinas to take care of themselves. Newbern, on the Neuse River, can be approached by water, and the railroad communication of Beaufort (N. C.) with the interior be cut off at that point, and a base be made here for future operations against other portions of the State—Raleigh, Goldsboro', important railroad junctions, and other towns.

Such we see to be the advantages of this expedition, should its first aim be these important Sounds. It may do more, it may do less than we have hinted, but it is at any rate, in good hands. On one point we have much confidence in Gen. Burnside—wherever he sweeps rebellion away before him, Slavery will go with it, as its first great cause, and its chief support.
