er was forbidden in the States and not prohibited to the General Government, might properly be exercised by Congress whenever a paramount necessity for the preservation or prosperity of the Government existed. Neither Jefferson or Madison hesitated, the one in the purchase of Louisiana, and the other in establishing a United States Bank, to approve measures acknowledged by themselves to be of doubtful constitutionality, although not positively prohibited.

Government must take the regulation of the currency into its own keeping, to provide ways and means to carry on the war, or sanction a repetition of the ruinous sacrifices of 1812, taking from the pocket of the people to fill those of the capitalists and speculators. Shall we be justified, when the Government possesses this mighty power to help itself, in refusing its exercise, and leaving it to the prey of those whose voracity knows no bounds? Shall the Government be deterred from the exercise of its high powers, because it will necessarily equalize the division of property when its very destruction is threatened, which to avert it is absolutely necessary should be done.

Mr. Wright, of Pennsylvania, said he had voted to sustain the President in suspending the writ of habeas corpus, in declaring certain ports blockaded, and for other extreme measures, which were justified by the public necessity. Now they were called upon, according to the terms of this bill, to declare it constitutional and legal to make money out of paper. He did not feel justified in going so far as to cast his vote for any such measure. He would vote for taxation to the uttermost limits. We have the means, the property and the money; but the issues now proposed would bring upon the country worse ruin than the Rebels have already thrown upon it. The notes authorized in the bill are payable at no place or time, and are to be made a legal tender in payment of all debts. He argued the constitutional question, that they could not make anything but gold and silver a legal tender.

Mr. Horton, of Ohio, said if the bill should pass, which he hoped would not be the case, it would be a departure from the financial system of the country. It had been reiterated, but not proven, that this was a measure, not of choice, but of necessity. Passing by the question of constitutionality, he proceeded to express some practical views. The country never was as wealthy as it is to-day—never owed less to foreign countries, and never so free from financial embarrassments. The treasury wants an immense amount of money. The question is, how shall it be obtained? The people not only have the means, but the ability and determination to pay principal and interest on the public debt. He advocated Mr. Morrill's substitute, which proposes the payment of the interest in coin, and for the redemption of the notes in ten and twenty years, and stated at length his objections to the pending measure.

The Committee then rose, after it was mutually agreed upon that the general debate on this bill is to cease on the expiration of two hours after the House shall again take it up.

The House then adjourned.

[The following poem appeared some time since in the Boston Emancipator, a journal which now shouts lustily for the Union and the Star Spangled Banner:]

THE STAR SPANGLED BANNER.

AN ODE TO THE FOURTH OF JULY

On the Fourth of July, when ye vaunt of those rights
Which the blood of our fathers was shed to recover,
And our country's broad flag is unfurled on her heights—
Know ye not 'tis a mock of the living Jehovah?
Whose ear is not deaf,
To the accent of grief,
Or the prayer that ascends to his throne for relief,
From those fields where the "Star Spangled Banner" still waves
In the breeze that sweeps over two millions of slaves!

The Star Spangled Banner! That beautiful flag!
Maintaining with all the most friendly relations—
Wherever it visits, still fated to drag
The damning reproaches of all Christian nations!
There's a people who dare,
To all nations declare,
That "all men are equal," and yet, even there—
That Banner—the Star Spangled Banner, still waves
In the breeze that sweeps over two millions of slaves!

"The Republican Flag!" which every poor soul,
That struggling for Freedom, would claim for Protector!
Which would fain guard the people—the Greek or the Pole,
From the ruthless dominion of Tyranny's sceptre!
But why talk ye of kings,
When every gale brings
The scream of despair as the driver's whip rings,
Where the Star Spangled Banner so gorgeously waves
In the breeze that sweeps over two millions of slaves!

"Dionysius and Nero, more noxious! know
No parallel system of hellish oppression!
And modes may come and take lessons of you,
For refinement in torture—The Turk and the Russian."
No! Religion shall plead,
For the wretches that bleed,
Till through our broad land the last victim is freed;
And the Star Spangled Banner no longer shall wave
In the breeze that sweeps over one trodden-down slave!

When borne on the wings of the wind o'er the deep,
We spy in the distance some rover of ocean,
Manœuvering to speak us as onward we keep;
What object awakens the deepest emotion—
When we see her display,
O'er the billowy way,
That flag which our foes aye behold with dismay!
'Tis the Star Spangled Banner!—Alas! that it waves
In the breeze that sweeps over two millions of slaves!

When approaching our country we see her green hills,
And that flag—the Palladium of her constitution;
What bosom that glows not? What eye that not fills,
To see that fair banner thus stained with pollution?
Then let's vow that the stain,
Shall no longer remain;
Nor the friends of humanity henceforth complain
That the beautiful Star Spangled Banner doth wave
In a breeze that sweeps over one trodden down slave!

Where age or sickness has turned it gray, and that it will restore it with all its gloss.
"ANYBODY" who has only to WASH their head with the preparation, and rub the scalp, by means of the finger ends, gives new life and strength to the Hair, and thus restores it to its original color. It can be used as freely as water to the hair, and with as much safety, and is pleasanter to use. It stimulates the growth of the hair, and has never failed to restore gray hair to its natural color, when the roots were not dead.
