Since the first Monday in December last Congress has been in session, and as much business has not been transacted as could have been performed by ten men of common sense in as many days. Their action on the bill to pay their own per diem shews that they can be prompt where their own interests are concerned: if they would only proceed with like energy with the business the sooner they are compelled to return home complaint. But then they would have to chance "to "blow off their steam," and, as they come well charged, they must be eased, though the hapressure gentlemen has the vanity of the eastern action could be despatched in a month or less. prince, who, on dining, gave the command, "Attention, the world; you may now cat as the king has dined." Each thinks the eyes of the uniwerse directed to his important self; and, puffed up by this imaginary greatness, deems it unjust to mankind that the tongue should be silent, the lightest lispings of which are to charm the world. We have such encounts, and listened to their ridiculous conceits with the regret, that nothing less than the strait-jacket and water grach could restore tieres to reason.

We are in faror of free discussion, and consequently would not restrain the liberty of speech, except ed far as to compel every speaker to confine himself to the question under consideration: The sule on this head should be rigidly enforced.

, alayis paper. The discovery of a southern continent opens a wide field for conjecture—and we hope that our government will not rest content with the knowledge of its existence. The presence of ice-bergs her way to Norfolk, the chief engineer, Jesse surprised. in high southern latitudes, and other indications, led Cook and other, navigators to believe that there must be a southern continent, though they were unable to discover it. Having found land, we muste endeavor to explore it as a matter of scientific interest, if not otherwise of national advantage. We have various theories as to the progenitors of the aborigines of the American continent, and of the numerous islands of the Pacific ocean; but none of these would apply to the inhabitants of the southern continent, should such be discovered; for we do not think it possible) that they could have reached the shores of the continent from Asia, or any of the islands, in the small rescels in use in ancient times. The same difficulty will exist as to beasts, if they be found,) particularly those of the larger kind. We think it very desirable that discovery should be pushed, of accidental death. ject to be attained.
