MONDAY MORNING, FEB. 15, 1841.

Warling movements. On referring to our Washington correspondence it will be seen that the report of the committee on foreign affairs, touching the late difficulties in reference to the Caroline, has been presented by Mr. Pickens. The report is said to be of a bold, fearless and independent character—such as may probably lead -to war between this country and Great Britain.

THE BANKS. Some of the Banks in this city, (and perhaps all of them,) refuse to receive rail - road notes in payment of debts. APPOINTMENTS. As the day approaches for the inauguration of General Harrison, those who are seeking appointments become more busy and restless—and some are said to carry their pen and ink-horn in hand that they may be ready for the signature of every passer-by.-Streets, lanes and alleys, high-roads and byroads are paced with eager anxiety for recommendations; and we suspect that the signature of many school-boys will be found appended to the voluminous documents which are preparing for favorite doctrine with them-what it will be in four years hence with those who may be successful, we shall leave to be determined by time- our last paper. - but, in the course of considerable experience, we

The public have already suffered so much from misplaced confidence, that General Harrison will no doubt be cautious to appoint no man who cannot come recommended for capacity and integrity. Rolls of signatures from unknown individuals, can have no influence with him-for he will naturally infer that a repubrightest or fairest.

Some of the applicants are for specific appointments-some will accept of either of certain designated offices-whilst others again embrace every thing within the gift of the President, from a foreign mission to a suit of cast-off clothes.

State vs. James Hawkins, a mulatto boy, alias James Pullit, for assault with intent to kill a colored man named Jesse Evans. This case was of some little importance. The parties were both old penitentiary birds. The assault was made on the 6th of last November in the penitentiary. I seemed that previous to the time above mentioned Evans had made use of some expressions to his fellow prisoners derogatory to the character of Hawkins. Hawkins determined to have revenge. He accordingly, on the 6th of December, when Evans was at work, and in a stooping position, stabbed him in the neck behind the right ear with a shoemaker's knife, producing a wound the depth of three inches and three quarters. It the performance. If we may judge from what was proven by Mr. McCafferty, an officer of the penitentiary, that Hawkins had said he intended for. to kill Evans. Mr. Houlton, superintendent of the penitentiary, testified that immediately after the act had been committed he saw Hawkins with the handle of the knife with which he had inflicted the wound in his hand, the blade having been lest fast in Evans' neck.
