> For the Baltimore Clipper. THINGS THAT ARE SWEET.

Bweet is the truth, and sweet the poesy too, That can, in vivid lines, express sweet things; Bweet the dark eye, and cheek of rosy hus, And sweet dear scenes that mem'ry backward brings.

Bweet is the welcome, we receive from friends, Remembrance, of that welcome, too is sweet; Bweet are the means that consummate good ends, Sweet, to the sinner, is repentance meet.

Sweet, all things are, that demonstrate God's love, Sweet are the murmurs of the mouning wisd; The stars are sweet, and all the worlds above, But Hope is sweetest, to the immortal mind!

Dear is this Earth, with all its happy scenes, Sweet are its rivers broad, and valleys wide; Dear are its mountains high, and "village greens," Where joyous childhood "doff'd the world aside."

Sweet is the evening hour—the close of day, The sungitt clouds that curtain all the West, And Pancy then, most sweetly seems to say, "Bright will the future be, and man be blemed."

Dear is the friend, who meets us on the way, By which, through life, we pass its varied scenes; Eweet is the voice, which kindly bids us stay, And peace enjoy, where Heaven bestows the means.

Let this suffice—sweet are the tears of joy, Dear is that innocence, we dare maintain, And dear the thoughts, my inmost soul employ, orphan. We leave this first sorrow, and pass on to witness the struggles of the afflicted widow a year afterwards. The time having arrived when the mortgage was to be paid, she borrowed the money of a neighbor who had been very attentive to her husband and herself, one who knelt at the same table with her to renew their professed obligations to the giver of all good. Hard and patiently did she toil to repay the sum against the promised time; but all would not do; fortune frowned, and she gave way to her accumulated troubles. Disheartened and distracted, she relinguished her farm and the stock for less than she owed her christian neighbor, who, not satisfied with that, put an execution on her furniture.

The earth-born thoughts of "Sace, Woods, & Maine."

On the Sabath previous to the sale, she took courage, and strengthening herself with the know. ledge of having wronged no one, went to the lutions submitted by him on the same subject, temple of her Father, and with a heart filled with humility and love, poured out her soul to the 18th inst.
