STANZAS. Though fortune smile and bounteous prove, And her best gifus bestow; There's still one bliss, I prize above 'All others here below.

A heart which knows affection's ties, And beats alone for me, Is what I far more highly prize, Than fortune's best decree.

Give me a bosom where there reigns A passion pure and strong, And feelings, which each giance explains, To me alone belong.

Oh! what is there in wealth and fame, Or what in life at best, When none, with us, those bounties claim, And mone, but we, are blest.

LOVE AND GOOSEBERRIES.

A SENTIMENTAL STORY.

[By the Editor of the "Natchez Courier."] It is a horrid day-and why shouldn't we write sentiment? An Englishman would hang himself in such weather-we'll sentimentalize. Bulwer agree with us, gentle reader, get two feet of strong rope; and hang yourself by way of experiment. And should we ever wander over the fields of Acheron together, we will compare notes, and decide the point at issue. But we'll not believe a word you may say against our theory, until you have made way with yourself.

Well, now for it. Shall we paint you the awful horrors of the tempest, show you the "zirpumps of heaven, sucking up" their fatal draughts with a forty thousand horse power, and take you put it in a wrapper for him. as an inside passenger in the car of the Storm-King, as he careers in frantic fury through the shrinking sky? You should "sup full of horrors" were we to use our patent-locomotive steel pen upon this terrific theme. Or shall we write a tale of fiendish necromaney? How a young lady was beloved by two brothers-bow one, "a nice young man," was blest by her rosy smiles, and the other, a dark-haired. beetle-browed ruffian, blasted by her thunder-andlightning frowns-how the black individual invoked the aid of Satan, and became a mighty magician-how he spirited away the damsel to an enchanted castle, into which no one could enter um-bow a kind of fairy-what a delightful little other, without remuneration? except he had the pass-word, presto vado vediaccreature! gave the "nice young man" the pass-

FIRST BRANCH, Feb. 25. Present, H. Sayder, [Esq., President, and all the members except]

Mr. Hack presented the petition of Mr. G. N. Stewart and others, relative to the opening of a portion of Vine Meet. Referred to joint committee on streets.

Mr. Holter presented the report and resolution of the joint committee on water, in reference to the resolution of inquiry respecting hydrants .- \ Also, a report and resolution relative to the petition of Thomas II. Lamden, keeper of the Eastern Fountain, praying for an increase of salary, both of which were unfavorable.

Mr. Reyser called up the report and resolution of the committee on fire companies, relative to the proposed appropriation of $600 for the purform Church in Second street. Mr. Keyser sustained the report with a very able and excellent speech. We find this honorable and valuable member of the branch always actively engaged rially to the banks, they should therefore pay a portion of the expenses, and moved that $400, in the place of $600, be inserted in the resolution. Mr. Dallam was of opinion that $600 was too little. The motion for amendment was lost. The resolution was carried. Yeas 18, nays 4. The preamble was also adopted. A message was received from the Second committee on streets, on a resolution from the Second Branch, which was favorable. A communication was received through the Mayor, asking aspecial loan of $10,000 from the city corporation, to the President and Directors of the Baltimore and Chesapeake Steam Towing Company. Referred to the committee on com-
