MARYLAND LEGISLATURE. ANNAPOIS, Feb. 27, 1841.

House of Delegates. The House was in session quite late yesterday, considering the early hour they now meet. The tax bill is still under consideration, and if they do not make greater progress than they have for the last three or four days, they will hardly be able to decide upon it before the time fixed for ending the session.

The House are at present in committee of the whole busily engaged in the consideration of the Tax Bill. They have at length got through the first section, in the discussion of which they have been engaged for the last day or two. This section designates the kind of property to be taxed, and it is but right that the committee should deliberate on what is perhaps the most important section of the bill.

CITY COUNCIL. First Branch, March 1. The Branch met pursuant to adjournment. Present, Mr. Snyder, President, and all the members. Mr. Perego presented the petition of Solomon W. Wilson, praying a remuneration for sweeping Holland street. Referred to joint committee on markets.

For the Baltimore Clipper. STANZAS. Should all the hills which life attend, Their shadows throw around my course; Should sorrow's sting its anguish blend, With every species of remorse: Should tempest rage, and blights befall, One used to every worldly good; Should friends and kindred, mankind, all Oh! press me, spurn me, all they could.

From Graham's Magazine for March. THE CIRCISSIAN BRIDE. BY E. WETHERSALD. "She walks in beauty, like the night Of cloudless climes and starry skies."

Nerinda was the daughter of a shepherd, who dwelt in one of the charming portions of Circissia. If beauty was a blessing, Nerinda was blessed beyond the ordinary lot of mortals, for the fame of her loveliness had extended through the neighboring valleys, and at the early age of fourteen her hand had been sought by many, with an earnestness which showed her parents that a treasure they possessed in their eldest born. But no one had been able to obtain her.

spire Nerinda with his own hopes. She almost sank under the trial, and it was many days before she had strength to revisit the bank of turf, their accustomed resting place. When she did, however changed did all appear; the flowers were still blooming around; the stream flowed on with its accustomed murmur; the birds chattered sweetly as of old; where then was the change? Alas! it was in her own heart; joy and happiness had fled with Hassan, and melancholy had taken their place.

Two years and six months had passed since the departure of the youth, and there seemed little probability of his return; even his venerable father mourned him as dead, when a company of traders entered the mountains. One of whom was an old acquaintance in the valley. He renewed his solicitations to the father of Nerinda, that she might be placed under his charge; offering the highest price, and promising that her future lot should be as brilliant and delightful as her past had been obscure. The shepherd was greatly disappointed by the non-appearance of Hassan, for he would have preferred keeping his daughter near him if he could have done so with advantage, and imagining he should be perfectly happy if possessed of so much wealth as the trader offered, he consented to part with her who had ever been his chief delight, and the pride of his heart.

When he entered the room to which she had been conducted, he gently raised her veil. She looked up, and recognized him instantly; her joy was as unbounded as his own, but was displayed in a different manner. She threw herself into his arms and sobbed and wept. She was, however, at length able to listen tranquilly to the account of his adventures, and to relate her own. The remembrance of his aged parent, doubly endeared by absence, and of his joyous childhood, were still alive in the breast of Hassan; and after a few days spent at Constantinople, he proposed to return to his native valley.
