For the Baltimore Clipper.

HE DONT LIKE ME. He romps about with sister Fan, And praises Clara's bright blue eyes, He sings ductts with cousin Ann, But when he looks at me-be sight. What can the matter ever be!

I am afraid 'be dont like me.' The other morning in my walk I met the handsome Charles Du. P. And while engaged in pleasant talk, Pray who but him I chanced to see: And oh! so angry then look'd he, I felt quite sail 'he dont like me."

Ah! here he comes-since he's so rude, I'm change my conduct altogether— He need not be so cross, for I Am sure that I dont like him either, I'll be as cool as I can be— I wonder why 'he dont like me.' Ah! dearest, are you all alone,

For once kind fate is in my favor, Then listen to my tale of love, And do not cast me off forever. That blush, that smile—ah! say you'll be The bright star of my destiny! The coaring soul-how sly is he; I cant refuse-now he likes me! Balt. March. 1841.

How many are thy faults, vain man, Thy virtues-oh! how few, And yet, how rigidly we scan The acts that others do. Without a thought, we quick condemn The friends we most should cherish;

And elevate the worst of men, The worthy leave to perish.
